PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 100th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE—Wednesday, April 20, 1988

(Legislative day of Monday, April 11, 1988)

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable BOB GRAHAM, a Senator from the State of Florida.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

I know all of us are thankful for the resolution of the Kuwaiti Airline situation, and, Father, we thank You for the release of the hostages.

"As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country"—Proverbs 25:25.

Eternal God, perfect in truth, infinite in justice, this morning I pray for the members of the press and the media—the men and women who devote their lives to keeping the world informed—generally with little or no appreciation by the public. It is so easy to criticize the press, forgetting that we ourselves are sinners and, probably more than they, handle the truth carelessly. Thank You, Father, for their commitment to getting the news wherever, whenever it breaks, often at great risk. Whenever allowed, they go where the action is: demonstrations, conflict, catastrophy, terrorism, war—whatever the danger. In their business, they are vulnerable as few other professionals are. Help us to realize, Lord, what it would be like in a world without a free press and help us to appreciate these dedicated people and their mission. Bless all of them, their loved ones, their friends, their institutions. We pray this in the name of Him who brings good news to all who will hear. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. STENNIS].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, April 20, 1988.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, Section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable BOB GRAHAM, a Senator from the State of Florida, to perform the duties of the Chair.

JOHN C. STENNIS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. GRAHAM thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the standing order, the acting majority leader is recognized.

RESERVATION OF LEADERSHIP TIME

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the majority and minority leaders be reserved for their use later in the day.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CHAPLAIN'S PRAYER

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I congratulate the Chaplain for his prayer for the press. This is the first time I have heard anybody pray for the press. I have heard remarks about the press and criticism of the press, but it is a superlative prayer because there is a very healthy tension, sometimes a healthy hostility, between the press and elected representatives. That is the way it should be. There is no question they do a remarkable job under very difficult circumstances.

A CHALLENGE TO CONGRESS TO TAKE CHARGE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, one of the most hopeful signs for this country is the big sale of Prof. Paul Kennedy's book "The Rise and Fall of the Great Powers." For several months now the Kennedy book has been at or near the top of the country's best selling books. This Yale professor of history has been giving the Nation exactly the lesson we need in what happens to countries that live beyond their means. I earnestly wish every Member of the Congress could read this expert historian's account of what has persistently happened to great nations—often world dominating nations—that plunged deeply into debt, while saving less and less. Kennedy tells the story of what has happened to nations that consumed more than they produced, that put leisure and recreation above education and hard work.

Professor Kennedy does not argue that the decline of the great power, the United States, is inevitable. Far from it. It is anything but inevitable. Our future is in our hands. It is especially in the hands of Members of the Congress. Certainly the one prime reason for serving in the Congress is to be one of those who, as an elected representative, directly determines our country's future. We in the Congress are among the few who can make a real difference. We Members of the Congress can together determine whether our country continues as the leading country of the free world or whether it fails.

If we keep a frightened eye on the next election and ignore our country's long-term future, then we continue to increase funding popular spending programs and continue to refuse to raise the taxes to pay for those programs. That is a very effective short-term program to win reelection, but it is a devastatingly shortsighted program for the future of our country.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

Dr. Kennedy takes us through the past 500 years of enormous military spending by world dominating nations that sank their economies under the military burden. From the Spanish Armanda to the great British Navy, the absorption by the military of limited economic resources has crippled great nations and eventually hammered them to their knees. In our time, the strategic defense initiative [SDI] may become our Spanish Armada. Former Secretaries of Defense have warned us that the ultimate cost of SDI could exceed a trillion dollars. And once completed the annual cost of operating, maintaining, and modernizing SDI could increase military spending by 50 percent. And our ablest scientists—the National Academy of Science—have told us that with all that huge cost, like the Spanish Armada, SDI will not work. Of course, our ablest scientists may be wrong. What effect then would this colossal increase in military spending for a successful SDI have on our economy? Kennedy's brilliant review of history tells us it could be devastating. This is particularly true if the Congress fails to raise taxes by a trillion dollars or more to pay for it.

Mr. President, the cost of paying interest on this soaring Federal debt will take more and more of our revenues. That annual interest burden is the most rapidly rising cost of Government and it is already costing us $150 billion in net interest per year. Every year we fail to cut spending or raise taxes enough to balance the budget the interest cost goes higher.

What can the Congress do about the indebtedness of the American household sector and the business sector of our economy? American households now owe more than $3 trillion. American nonfinancial business owes a mammoth $3.6 trillion. Both of these figures are at all time highs. Both, of course, require mammoth interest payments every year that constitute a drain on income that should go into research, education, improved manufacturing and commercial facilities and other productive investments.

In an article in the April 17 New York Times Paul Kennedy concludes a remarkable article with the following challenge:

> Previous great powers lost their productive vitality not because their decline was economically "determined" but because cultural and ideological prejudices, an unwillingness to adapt to new methods, a propensity to spend on the present (consumption and defense) rather than on the future (investment) all combined to prevent a renewal of the nation's productive base. Are we ready to follow that historical pattern, or do we want to learn from history?

Mr. President, in the hope that my colleagues in the Congress will read this brief challenging article by Professor Kennedy and ponder it, I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A GUIDE TO MISINTERPRETERS

(By Paul Kennedy)

NEW HAVEN.—One of the mixed blessings of having written a best seller, "The Rise and Fall of the Great Powers," is the array of interpretations and misinterpretations of what it is saying.

My book has been variously described as "supremely well timed" and a "surprise," though it can hardly be both. From Aryan supremacists to flat-earth believers, groups across the country have written to say that it reinforces their message. Liberal economists have expressed doubts about its militarist and mercantilist tendencies. On the other hand, the Reaganite right has denounced it as "liberal defeatism." It is all rather odd.

Perhaps the greatest misinterpretation has been the conservatives' attack for its "economic determinism," and for (in their view) its postulating the "inevitable" decline of the United States on economic grounds. Yet a more careful reading and somewhat more thought on their part ought to have suggested that the historical causation that the book analyzes points to a quite different interpretation of what "determines" national decline.

The real distinction they have missed is that between the impact of economic trends and the causes of those trends.

If a nation becomes so indebted that it loses its credit-worthiness; if its manufacturing base shrinks so much that it cannot produce goods (for example, microchips) needed for its own industry and its defense forces; if its currency has less and less value on international exchanges; if it devotes too much of its national resources to consumption and defense spending, at the cost of long-term investment; if it produces fewer and fewer engineers and more and more lawyers and dentists and stock jobbers, then sooner or later all that is going to have serious impacts upon the wealth and strength of the nation. If that is "economic determinism," so be it. It sounds more like common sense to me.

But nothing in my argument says that the causes of such trends are irreversible and inevitable. Like Spain in the 1660's and Britain in the 1890's, the United States today has certain options open to it in order to reinvigorate its productive base and meet the challenge posed by faster-growing economies of other countries.

America could close the awful Federal deficit (by higher taxes, if necessary). It could redirect national resources from consumption into savings (by altering the tax structure). It could encourage a lot more investment in commercial research and development (if need be, even at the cost of military research and development). It could make serious efforts to increase the number of native American engineers, and massively to boost the scientific and mathematical skills of our 17 year olds (though that again would cost money). It could increase the school year from the present 185 days to something closer to the Japanese standard: about 240 days.

All of these things could be done—if the American people and their political representatives wanted it. But when I suggest this package of policies to audiences across the country, I meet with murmurings of disbelief and disagreement. "That can't happen here." That will never get through Congress." "I'm against a longer school year." And to all such objections, I have a simple response: "Who is being the 'inevitabilist,' you or me?" Just who is being defeatist here?"

Previous great powers lost their productive vitality not because their decline was economically "determined" but because cultural and ideological prejudices, an unwillingness to adapt to new methods, a propensity to spend on the present (consumption and defense) rather than on the future (investment) all combined to prevent a renewal of the nation's productive base.

Are we ready to follow that historical pattern, or do we want to learn from history?

DOUGLAS WALLER ON THE NUCLEAR FREEZE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, one of the most important arms control developments in recent years was the nuclear freeze. Here was a mass movement that enlisted millions of Americans in the cause of arms control. The freeze movement succeeded in placing before the American people in State after State referenda that won smashing support for an end to the nuclear arms race. In the House of Representatives, the nuclear freeze won a startling 278 to 149 victory against the opposition of an enormously popular President, at the peak of his popularity. Douglas Waller was right in on the ground floor in this arms control struggle. He was a staff assistant to Congressman EDWARD MARKEY, of Massachusetts, who was a principal freeze advocate in the House. Waller has written a superb book on this critical arms control fight entitled "Congress and the Nuclear Freeze: An Inside Look at the Politics of a Mass Movement." Sanford Gottlieb, the highly respected expert and producer of the television program, "America's Defense Monitor," has written a stirring review of the Waller book for the March issue of Arms Control Today.

I ask unanimous consent that the review by Sanford Gottlieb be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INSIDE THE FREEZE

(Sanford Gottlieb)

The nuclear freeze campaign of 1981–83 was unique. In the history of arms control, it was the only time a proposal originating within the peace movement became a joint, high priority legislative goal of a nationwide grassroots campaign and of important members of Congress; was endorsed in a series of state and city referenda; received active lobbying support from a broad array of mainstream organizations; was adopted by the House of Representatives; garnered worldwide media attention; and shook up a deeply hostile president.

Douglas Waller tells the legislative story of the campaign in rich detail. He provides keen insights into the process and the players. Waller was a key insider as an aide to Congressman Edward Markey. The Massachusetts Democrat was one of the chief organizers of the effort in the House, where a much-amended nuclear freeze resolution received a resounding vote of 278-149 in 1983.

Congress and the Nuclear Freeze makes impressively clear how much hard work went into the outcome, both in Washington and around the country. Yet, after the House vote, as Waller reports, the movement lost momentum. The Senate refused to adopt a freeze resolution. Neither House was yet ready for a cutoff of funds for the new weapons systems. Meanwhile, President Reagan had launched his quest for Star Wars, and the Soviets had quit the Geneva arms talks as the U.S. intermediate-range missiles were deployed in Europe. By late 1983 the freeze campaign was overtaken by events, entrenched anti-Sovietism, and the political clout of Ronald Reagan.

The President's inflammatory rhetoric and behavior in 1981 had done much to create the movement. The administration's early emphasis on "winnable" and "survivable" nuclear war at a time of deteriorating U.S.-Soviet relations helped spawn the Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign and other new organizations, and revived older, flagging arms control groups. In 1981-83, the American peace movement reached a breadth of support and intensity of participation never before seen.

Waller describes how the movement rallied behind a simple, powerful idea: stop the arms race in its tracks by halting the testing, production, and deployment of new nuclear weapons. Randall Forsberg, founder of the Institute for Defense and Disarmament Studies, wrote the first call for a mutual U.S.-Soviet nuclear weapon freeze. In 1980 she vigorously lobbied the peace groups, winning the support at first only of a narrowly based handful. That handful created the Freeze Campaign, and from there it took off.

Forsberg not only had a good idea, she had a practical strategy. "No major disarmament effort," she said, "can succeed without the support of the majority of middle class, middle-of-the-road citizens." Thanks to that open attitude, the moderate, bilateral character of the freeze approach to arms control, and a ripe political climate, middle class citizens flocked to the Freeze Campaign.

At the same time, physicians, lawyers, scientists, and psychologists joined specialized arms control groups in their professions. The new movement rapidly achieved solid credibility.

The experts were slower to move. Some of them endorsed the freeze and became outstanding spokesmen. Others sniped at the freeze idea and movement. Their opposition seems to have been based either on a desire to manage a continuing arms race rather than to stop it, or an elitist view that ordinary citizens shouldn't clutter up the arms control landscape.

Despite its loss of steam, the movement as a whole—and the Catholic Bishops' Pastoral Letter on War and Peace—pressured Reagan into softening his rhetoric and getting serious about negotiations. In time, Reagan adopted bold arms reduction goals. He even succeeded in concluding the treaty on intermediate-range missiles. This would not have happened without the pressure from the movement, and Mikhail Gorbachev.

In reading the subtitle of Congress and the Nuclear Freeze, one might be led to assume that the book deals with the grassroots dynamics of the movement. That subtitle, "An Inside Look at the Politics of a Mass Movement," is misleading. Waller has given us the authoritative book on the congressional politics of the freeze. He did not attempt, however, to cover the politics of a mass movement. He does report on the Freeze Campaign's vibrant annual meetings, where grassroots purists contended with pragmatists. And he does describe the close links between the movement and Capitol Hill strategists. But a lot more was happening in the mass movement than could possibly be squeezed into this splendid book.

Waller takes a broad-gauged view of congressional politics. He reports vividly on the conflicting interests that are part of the democratic process. He is sensitive to the fact that popular upsurges on behalf of arms control usually lead to the signing of treaties. The Limited Test Ban and the ABM Treaties are cases in point.

What, then, happened after the biggest upsurge of all? As noted above, a dramatic change in Ronald Reagan and the INF Treaty. And the answer is still being written.

If pressure from the movement also persuaded Reagan, as some believe, to seek an antidote in Star Wars, then that is poor judgment by the chief executive and not a fault of the movement.

Two other things happened as a result of the freeze movement. Congress developed more backbone in contesting arms policy with the president. Today, Congress struggles to impose its mark on SALT II limits, the ABM Treaty, and antisatellite and nuclear-weapons testing. The long hours spent discussing the nuclear freeze resolution paved the way. Finally, in 1984 the peace movement moved into electoral politics in a serious way. While there was no impact on the presidential race, there were some victories in Congress. A mature movement needs not only to win debates but also to change the decision-makers.

In Congress and the Nuclear Freeze, Douglas Waller has given us a better understanding of arms control and American politics. In his new job at Newsweek as defense and foreign policy correspondent, he'll have the opportunity to bring his insights to a broader public. We look forward to reading him regularly.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 9:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

THE ANTI-DRUG ABUSE ACT OF 1988

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, on March 23, 1988, Senator D'AMATO and I introduced the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. This comprehensive piece of legislation attacks the national drug abuse and drug trafficking problem on multiple fronts, including: drug education, drug treatment and rehabilitation, drug interdiction, increased funding for Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, and new and innovative international narcotics control programs.

Mr. President, illegal drugs and the criminals who sell these poisons, have turned our cities into war zones. The American people are asking for more than just tough talk, they want action. My colleagues understand the need for Congress to take the lead in mounting a war on drugs and they have overwhelmingly supported S. 2205. Already 68 Senators have joined Senator D'AMATO and me on this major new initiative.

Last week during action on the budget resolution the Senate took the first step in adopting tough new anti-drug legislation for fiscal year 1989. In a vote of 93 to 0, the Senate adopted an amendment sponsored by Senators D'AMATO, DOMENICI, CHILES, DOLE, the Senator presiding in the chair right now, Senator GRAHAM, and me that provides a mechanism for accommodating the necessary budget authority and outlays to cover the full, first year cost of new drug legislation at the tune of $2.6 billion in new budget authority and $1.4 billion in outlays.

Today I want to speak on one provision of S. 2205 that I believe would finally provide our law enforcement agencies with the necessary means to wage a more effective effort against those who produce these deadly poisons—the Chemical Diversion and Trafficking Act of 1988. This piece of legislation was crafted by the Drug Enforcement Administration at the direction of Congress in the 1986 Anti-Drug Abuse Act.

The problem in question stems from the fact that legitimately produced chemicals, widely available in commercial channels, are regularly being diverted to the manufacture of such illegal drugs as cocaine, heroin, PCP, and LSD. In fact, virtually all synthetic drugs consumed in the United States are manufactured within our borders in clandestine labs using precursor and essential chemicals obtained commercially in the United States. If this were not enough to stimulate action on our part, South American drug traffickers are increasingly moving their cocaine laboratories to the United States in order to take advantage of the ease with which they can acquire the essential chemicals necessary to produce cocaine.

The Drug Enforcement Administration has maintained an active voluntary program with the U.S. chemical industry. Despite the voluntary program that DEA has operated and its work with foreign law enforcement agencies, the extent of diversion and trafficking in these chemicals continues to grow. According to an article that appeared in the Washington Post April 17, DEA seized 647 illegal labs in 1987, a dramatic increase over the 197 labs seized in 1982. Already this year, lab seizures by DEA are up nearly 100 percent over 1987 figures.

I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CALIFORNIA'S NEW ROLE: LEADING PCP SUPPLIER—KEY DISTRIBUTORS ARE L.A. GANGS WORKING OUT OF MAKESHIFT LABS

(By Matt Lait)

Los Angles.—Although California has led the nation in the seizure of clandestine drug laboratories for the last three years, it is quickly earning a reputation as the nation's leading supplier of methamphetamines and phencyclidine (PCP), one of the Washington area's most abused illegal drugs.

The ease of obtaining and mixing the highly volatile chemicals has created a new age of drug entrepreneurs and amateur chemists who have found manufacturing and distributing these drugs dangerous but simple and profitable.

Los Angeles gang members have been identified as the main distributors of PCP, according to Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) officials. Using bathrooms, garages, apartments, mobile homes and even boats as makeshift laboratories, they mix the ingredients by the gallon. The Los Angeles Police Department estimates the street value of one gallon of PCP at $153,600, or $1,200 an ounce.

Of the 647 labs seized last year, most were manufacturing methamphetamine, and 489 were based in California. DEA statistics for the first five months of fiscal year 1988 show a nearly 100 percent increase in the number of lab seizures nationwide than the same period in 1987. There were 308 lab seizures in the first five months of fiscal 1988 compared with 156 in the same period in 1987.

"Los Angeles is to PCP what Santa Cruz, Bolivia, is to cocaine," DEA spokesman Mario Perez said in Washington. "Most of the PCP we find here can be traced back to California.

"PCP is the No. 1 illegal drug of choice in [the Washington area], with 'crack' cocaine and heroin right up there," he said.

A National Institute of Drug Abuse survey of 27 metropolitan cities found that Washington led the nation in 1986 in PCP emergency room hospitalizations, with 2,114 patients. The District also reported 65 deaths related to PCP, second only to Los Angeles with 119. Hospitalization figures for last year have not yet been compiled, but DEA officials say PCP resulted in 61 deaths in the District last year.

The survey said 80 percent of the users in the District are black males, usually in their mid-20s.

The large population of gangs in Los Angeles has made PCP manufacturing more prominent here, and the availability of the required chemicals and the ease in mixing them has led to an increase of clandestine labs over the years. "All you really need to mix PCP are two garbage cans and a broomstick," said Roger Guevara, DEA spokesman in Los Angeles.

"It's easier than baking a cake. In fact, [the drug manufacturers] call themselves 'cookers' and the formulas are called 'recipes,' " he said.

Cigarettes dipped in liquid PCP are sold as "Sherms." The liquid form is highly combustible and often explodes as the drug is being made or transported.

"The consequences are potentially hellacious," said Guevara, "and these [people] are carrying this stuff around in the trunks of their cars. The innocent-third party risk is quite significant. We just had one incident when [PCP] was transported in an airplane."

Five gallons of liquid PCP explodes with the force of a stick of dynamite, drug officials said.

In the back alley of West 59th Street, deep in Los Angeles's gang territory, stand the charred remains of a PCP lab that blew up late last month.

Alberta Russell, 59, who lives two doors down from the green, wood frame house, was watching television when the laboratory in the garage exploded and burned to the ground. "I heard a big boom and people screaming.

"I knew they was selling dope in there," Russell said. "They got what they deserved." Two people are still hospitalized with serious burns, including the operator of the lab, who spent two years in jail for manufacturing PCP less than three years ago.

Russell and other residents in the neighborhood stay indoors at night because of the gang activities. Walls, sidewalks and lightposts are littered with graffiti identifying the area as the turf of the 59th Street Bloods, one of the city's two dominant street gangs.

Used as an anesthetic before its side effects caused its discontinuation, PCP is now legally administered by veterinarians as a large-animal tranquilizer. In the early 1960s, the drug found its way into the illicit market as a hallucinogen. Because of its violent, mind-altering effects, PCP is one of the most feared drugs among drug-enforcement officials.

"We frequently hear stories of patrol officers shooting somebody 14 or so times and the guy keeps going at him. . . . They can literally get their arms torn off, and they don't feel a . . . thing. It's really scary," Guevara said.

The majority of the seized labs produced methamphetamines rather than PCP. Methamphetamines, also known as meth, crank or crystal, have not been as common as other drugs in the Washington area, but experts say they may soon become popular.

"It's an up-and-comer in the East Coast," said Ronald Dulisse, DEA spokesman in San Diego, where most of the nation's methamphetamine labs have been seized.

Conservative estimates put the production of methamphetamines in San Diego County at more than 20,000 pounds last year. "That's enough methamphetamine to keep every man, woman and child in this county [of 2.3 million] under the influence for six months," Dulisse said. "So we know it's being exported."

Methamphetamines made in San Diego County have been distributed to Oregon, Washington, Texas, Tennessee, Florida and New Jersey, according to the DEA.

Several years ago, the chemicals used to make methamphetamines were unregulated and could be freely bought for private use. The drug has become such a problem in the county that three members of Congress from the San Diego County area have submitted separate bills to regulate the sale of chemicals used to make the drug. Drug manufacturers smuggled the chemicals in from other states with ease, circumventing Califorina laws.

Methamphetamines have traditionally been produced and distributed by motorcycle gangs. But since the discovery of safer chemicals and new mixing procedures, "Everyone and anyone can do it," Dulisse said. "We were dealing with the motorcycle gangs . . . but now we find it's amateur hour, with people who don't belong in the business cooking methamphetamine."

Part of the blame for the increase of clandestine labs, according to drug officials, is the lack of uniform sentencing. "It's almost like crime without punishment," Dulisse said.

"Congress has mandated sentences for drugs such as cocaine, heroin, and marijuana, which are primarily imported drugs. But for all the other drugs that are manufactured in the United States—LSD, PCP, methamphetamines—there is no mandatory sentencing. It's almost as though we are more interested in the balance of payments than we are the drug problem. It's kind of a statement, 'Buy American,' " he said.

Because cocaine has become less expensive, the demand for PCP and methamphetamines has slightly declined. "Even if we were to stop the flow of narcotics from the exterior tomorrow, we would still have a drug problem because of the clandestine situation," Guevara said. "This is strictly an American phenomenon. We can't blame anyone else."

Mr. DECONCINI. According to DEA, black gangs in Los Angeles are the main producers and distributors of PCP and are shipping the deadly drug all over the United States. According to the Washington Post article the LA Police Department estimates the street value of 1 gallon of PCP at over $150,000.

The major source of income for most of the outlaw motorcycle gangs throughout the United States and Canada is from the manufacture and distribution of methamphetamine.

Organized crime elements in the Northeast control the distribution of the primary precursor chemical for this drug's production.

This operation has beome the major source of income for several traditional organized crime families.

Up to now, law enforcement agencies have lacked the tools necessary to go after those involved in the manufacture of illicit drugs.

The Chemical Diversion and Trafficking Act would give law enforcement those tools.

This act establishes a system of recordkeeping and identification requirements.

It requires the manufacturers, distributors, importers, and exporters to maintain records concerning types and quantities of chemicals sold and to whom they were sold.

These records would have to be kept for at least 2 years and would be subject to inspection by DEA.

Additionally, the purchaser of a chemical listed in the proposed legislation would be required to provide identification and sign a certification of lawful use to the chemical supplier.

The act establishes penalties for trafficking in listed precursor and essential chemicals as well as penalties for violations of the recordkeeping and reporting requirements. The bill also establishes criminal penalties for knowing and intentional trafficking in drug manufacturing equipment.

Mr. President, we face the dilemma of curtailing the availability of essential and precursor chemicals for illegal purposes, while at the same time ensuring their availability for legitimate use and not harming the ability of the U.S. chemical industry to compete with foreign competition. I believe the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, which contains the Chemical, Diversion and Trafficking Act, will enable us to accomplish this goal.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TONGASS NATIONAL FOREST

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the way in which southeast Alaska's 16.7 million acre Tongass National Forest is managed by the Forest Service has generated some controversy during the last few years. The argument centers on land use decisions made in 1980, after nearly a decade of congressional consideration. In that year the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act created 5.4 million acres of wilderness in the Tongass, and to offset those withdrawals established a program of intensive timber management.

As I have said on many occasions, understanding today's conflict in the Tongass requires a good grasp of the history of that forest and of the Alaska lands debate which carved up southeast Alaska. Each time I have spoken to this issue during the last 2 years it has been to provide the necessary history. As a participant in the debate over ANILCA I have tried to counter the misinterpretations of that history. I have testified before both House and Senate Committees and written article and letters to editors in an effort to keep the record straight.

The issue that drove the debate in 1980 was wilderness. National environmental groups virtually dictated the wilderness recommendations for the Tongass. These groups wanted large blocks of wilderness, and they got them—essentially all of the areas they proposed.

While the national environmentalists got what they wanted, Alaskans did not. I understand from SEACC, the local environmental coalition in the Tongass, that they believe they were sold out in 1980. SEACC feels the 5.4 million acres of wilderness designations protect some of the wrong areas, leaving places they consider important open to development.

Also taken was the timber industry. All they wanted was enough of a working forest for their industry to maintain its historic size. When the national environmental groups wanted more wilderness, intensive management was offered to make up for the withdrawals from the timber base, so the harvest could extend into marginal stands and more timber could be produced from less land. "A small price to pay," they said, "for more wilderness."

Today, the issue has become economics. Gone are the cries for wilderness at any price. Now the national environmental groups are focusing on the cost of harvesting timber from the Tongass.

I will put aside the hyprocrisy of this position. To be fair to these critics, my own concerns about how the Forest Service was spending funds for the Tongass Timber Supply Fund, established by ANILCA, prompted me to join Senator PROXMIRE in requesting a General Accounting Office audit of this program in 1986.

Mr. President, Scoop Jackson, the former Senator from Washington, our departed colleague and my good friend, was deeply involved in the compromise worked out for the Tongass. When ANILCA was brought to the floor of the Senate, Scoop had this to say about the arrangement:

> The entire underpinning of our approach is to designate wilderness without job loss. We have designated wilderness. Now we have to carefully monitor the timber supply situation in the Tongass in order to protect jobs.

Those who are focusing in now on economics are ignoring the intent of the Tongass timber program: maintaining a timber supply capable of meeting the historic level of demand of the timber industry. During the 3-year period prior to 1979, the average harvest from the Tongass was 450 million board feet a year. This was actually somewhat lower than the average for the decade, which was 520 million board feet.

If the program of intensive management had not been established, wilderness withdrawals would have reduced the supply of raw material for this industry. After closing off areas to timber harvesting, the remaining commercial timber base could sustain a harvest of no more than 338 million board feet a year. Intensive management of marginally economic timber stands and the normal timber base allow the Tongass to produce a sustained harvest averaging 450 million board feet a year, or 4.5 billion board feet per decade.

The program of intensive management was established in ANILCA because the alternative—reducing the timber supply—would have cost hundreds of jobs in an otherwise healthy timber industry. GAO's audit was intended to see how well the program established by ANILCA has achieved this goal.

For the last year and a half, GAO has been examining the Tongass. I have been encouraging others to wait until this audit was completed before reaching any conclusions about the program. Now, GAO is prepared to release its report. While some of this work will be useful, I do question the value of some parts of the report.

GAO examined a 6-year period. In 1980, the timber industry was near a peak nationwide. The market was strong, and we shaped ANILCA anticipating a steady demand for timber from the Tongass. As it turned out, timber prices plummeted by 1982, and did not begin to recover until the last few years.

By 1986, the end of GAO's study period, the market had turned around. Employment had begun to increase, and the demand for Tongass timber was up. What is not reflected in GAO's work is the continued improvement in the market in 1987 and, so far, in 1988.

I have to say, Mr. President, that GAO missed the point when it looked at industry employment. Intensive management of the Tongass was not intended to maintain constant employment, regardless of market conditions, as GAO assumed. No wonder they found that maintaining timber supply alone does not guarantee steady employment. In fact, they had it backward. The program was intended to allow the market, rather than the supply of timber, to control the size of Alaska's timber industry.

When ANILCA was passed, we expected timber supply to be a ceiling on growth of Alaska's timber industry. Instead, depressed markets have prevented the industry from reaching that ceiling. During the early years of this decade, timber was offered for sale at that ceiling level, irregardless of demand levels. That was intended in Forest Service management, not a flaw in the intensive management scheme. The Forest Service was directed to have ready to offer for sale at least the amount required.

GAO reaches some conclusions about the Tongass timber program which should provide guidance to the Forest Service. They must be weighed carefully, however. Their's is a judgment on how the program of intensive timber management has been run, and not on the need for such a program. It was established to meet a need which still exists. As the timber market improves, we can expect to see the industry bumping against the ceiling on timber supply created by ANILCA, ready to purchase all of the timber made available.

If intensive management were abandoned, the industry would be forced to restructure—to shrink. The difference between 338 million board feet and 450 million board feet is the difference between a healthy industry and a struggling one.

This is exactly the evil Congress wanted to avoid in establishing the Tongass Timber Supply Fund. The Forest Service could change their approach and respond to the timber market. When demand is down, they could offer less timber for sale. But they must maintain the ability to respond to an increase in demand.

Alaska did not seek out this intensive management approach in 1980. All that we wanted was a stable timber supply. Those who propose abandoning intensive management are asking Alaska to give up the timber supply it was promised in 1980. This would shift the entire cost of the 1980 wilderness withdrawals to Alaska's timber industry. The current scheme may not be the best solution possible to the conflict between wilderness and timber base. Until a workable alternative is proposed, however, it must remain.

ABM

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, as we proceed to mark up of the fiscal year 1989 Defense authorization bill, I would like to draw the Senate's attention to former President Nixon's remarks to the American Society of Newspaper Editors on April 15 on the subject of ABM Treaty reinterpretation.

In response to a question about the interpretation of the ABM Treaty, President Nixon stated:

> As far as what was presented to the Senate was concerned, it was what we call the narrow interpretation. There is no question about that. And so Senator Nunn is absolutely correct on that point.
> On the other hand, there are those who say . . . that what a treaty really means is how was it negotiated with the adversary, in this case the Soviet Union. And that in the negotiating with the Soviet Union, the broad interpretation was possible . . .
> . . . I don't go along with those that say that what we should do is to go forward with SDI, and just say that we accept the counsel from the State Department's interpretation. Because if you do that, you're going to find that the Senate, particularly with Nunn, a very powerful senator there, . . . will then block the funds for it. So that isn't going to work.

President Nixon was President during the negotiation of the ABM Treaty so he speaks with authority in terms of how the ABM Treaty was presented to the Senate at the time and what was negotiated with the Soviets.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the addition of Senators voting who did not answer the quorum call, a quorum is now present.

The majority leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I hope Senators will offer amendments. Is there a Senator who has an amendment ready?

Very well. Mr. President, Mr. HECHT has indicated that he will offer an amendment within about 2 minutes. If any Senator wishes to speak in morning business for 2 minutes, this would be a good opportunity.

I ask unanimous consent that Mr. HECHT be recognized upon the calling off of the quorum call so he may offer his amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANFORD). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1919

(Purpose: To remove the authorization of appropriations and other funding, disbursement, and expenditure provisions)

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. HECHT] proposes an amendment numbered 1919.

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 35, line 2, add "and" after the semicolon.

On page 35, line 6, strike out the semicolon and insert in lieu thereof a period.

On page 35, beginning with line 7, strike out all through line 3 on page 36.

On page 38, line 4, strike out "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

On page 38, line 7, strike out "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 39, beginning with line 21, strike out all through the end of the bill.

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, the amendment I am offering to S. 1009, is simple in intent and in structure, even though the issue we discuss here today clearly is not. In plain language, S. 1009 would accept the findings and implement the recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians. My amendment does not affect those findings; it does eliminate the recommendation of payment to individuals as compensation for their internment during the early 1940's.

There is no question, that December 7, 1941, and the days and weeks immediately after were, indeed, terrifying and confusing for all Americans. The attack on Pearl Harbor was a surprise to a nation that never thought it might be vulnerable to such an ordeal. With that came extraordinary events. I will not digress into an oratory on actions taken by the Government following Pearl Harbor or precautions taken for the public welfare. But I think it is safe to characterize this period as one of extreme unknowing. Rumor became fact and whether true or not, fear of the unknown moved nervous Americans, including President Roosevelt, to act to protect themselves.

The internment of Japanese-Americans, while unfortunate, happened, and it happened at a time frought with fear and trepidation of an enemy from without and one thought to be within. How was anyone to know different? How were Americans to know if, in fact, an attack was not imminent somewhere on the west coast? Well, Mr. President, the benefit of 20-20 hindsight has shown these fears and concerns to be without foundation.

The events of 1942 and following years are well known, and this bill seeks to make amends. Yet, I question whether or not the United States has already made restitution for its actions in 1942. We all know that in 1948, Congress agreed to the American-Japanese Evacuation Claims Act. Compensation was provided for those impacted by the internment and 26,568 claims were settled; $37 million was paid out.

Under S. 1009, the United States would once again be required to pay reparations to individuals who were interned. I want to assure my colleagues that I in no way wish to act in a prejudicial manner, or one in which may be construed to be anti-Japanese or anti-Aleut.

What I do wish to do is bring to this body a sense of what this legislation, if enacted, would cost the American taxpayer. The price tag as now envisioned is in the realm of $1.3 billion. That is approximately $20,000 for every person addressed in this legislation. And if enacted, the administrative cost to the Department of Justice to find and process persons entitled to payment could not be paid out of the trust fund created by this bill.

Just last week the Senate passed its version of the fiscal year 1989 budget and we applauded the fact that the deficit would only be $136 billion. The House budget is similar. Both cut significantly from our most important programs, including defense. So I ask, with this huge Federal deficit, how can we in good conscience now approve a bill with a price tag of $1.3 billion—$1.3 billion in new money—money that this Nation just does not have to spend? I do not think we can, which is why I have proposed this amendment.

Mr. President, this is a simple amendment and one I believe to be in the best interest of America's fiscal household. I urge its adoption, and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INOUYE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague, Senator MATSUNAGA, in urging the passage of S. 1009, a bill to accept the findings and implement the recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians.

Before proceeding, Mr. President, I wish to commend my colleague from Hawaii for this extraordinary feat. I believe that this is the first time any measure has reached this stage with 73 cosponsors. We have considered before us measures of great popularity, noncontroversial, but they have never had 73 cosponsors.

The measure before us is the source of much anguish and much controversy. Because of the commitment and dedication of Senator MATSUNAGA, he has been able to convince 72 of his colleagues to join him in this endeavor.

Many fellow Americans, including my colleague from Nevada, have asked: "Why should Japanese-Americans be compensated?" During times of war, especially in times of fear, all people suffer. That is a very common argument made against this measure.

Mr. President, while it is true that all people of this Nation suffer during wartime, the Japanese-American internment experience is unprecedented in the history of American civil rights deprivation. I think we should recall, even if painful, that Americans of Japanese ancestry were determined by our Government to be security risks without any formal allegations or charges of disloyalty or espionage. They were arbitrarily branded disloyal solely on the grounds of racial ancestry.

No similar mass internment was deemed necessary for Americans of German or Italian ancestries, and I think we should recall and remind ourselves that in World War II, the Japanese were not our only enemies.

These Japanese-Americans who were interned could not confront their accusers or bring their case before a court. These are basic rights of all Americans. They were incarcerated, forced to live in public communities with no privacy, and stripped of their freedom to move about as others could.

Japanese-Americans wishing to fight for this country were initially declared ineligible. However, once allowed to volunteer, they volunteered in great numbers. In fact, proportionately and percentagewise, more Japanese-Americans put on the uniform of this country during World War II, more were wounded and more were killed, even if they were restricted to serving in ethnically-restricted military units.

The individual payments acknowledge the unjust deprivation of liberty, the infliction of mental and physical suffering, and the stigma of being branded disloyal, losses not compensable under the Japanese Evacuation Claims Act of 1948.

Several years ago when this matter was being debated, I was asked by one of my colleagues whether $20,000 was too much. My response to him was, "If I were interned, I would consider $20,000 as being too little. How do you compensate a child who had just lost his mother, who committed suicide because of depression and anguish? How do you compensate those families who lost their fathers and husbands, who stood up and voiced objection and were shot down by the troops in the camps? They were not violating any of the laws of the United States. They were just exercising their first amendment rights to speak up, petition the Government. They were not armed. It was a peaceful demonstration. How do you compensate the families of those men? How do you compensate a fellow American for the stigma of being branded disloyal?" $20,000, Mr. President, is just token.

Rights guaranteed by the Constitution were sacrificed under the cloak of national security. This has been a common occurrence in the United States, and I think the time has come when we should put a stop to this. In the name of national security it has been fashionable to deny other Americans their constitutional rights, and in this case the Congress supported the President's policy of removal and detention by making the violation of orders issued pursuant to this Executive Order 9066 a criminal offense. And, sadly, the U.S. Supreme Court also upheld exclusion in the context of war.

But as we know, Mr. President, the Supreme Court has not always been correct. There was a time when the Supreme Court upheld slavery, and that was the law of the land. The Supreme Court in this case upheld internment, and that was the law of the land at that moment.

The Presidentially appointed Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians found no documented acts of espionage, sabotage, or fifth column activity by any, Mr. President, by any identifiable American citizen of Japanese ancestry or resident Japanese aliens on the west coast.

This was supposed to have been the rationale for this mass evacuation and mass incarceration, that these Americans were not to be trusted, that these Americans were agents of an enemy country, that these Americans would spy and carry out espionage, and this Presidentially appointed Commission, which incidentally was made up of leading citizens throughout this land—and only one member of that Commission was of Japanese ancestry—declared that there were no acts of espionage whatsoever. And sadly, the Commission in its 1983 report concluded that internment was motivated by racial prejudice, war hysteria, and a failure of political leadership.

The Commission further found that "widespread ignorance about Americans of Japanese descent contributed to a policy conceived in haste and executed in an atmosphere of fear and anger at Japan." The Government and society at large refused to recognize the distinction between the Japanese who bombed Pearl Harbor and Japanese-Americans and resident aliens of Japanese ancestry.

I know that this sounds facetious and trite, but to many Americans just because we look alike we must be alike. Mr. President, as we all know, that is not so. But the signs of the times, those times, were reflected by Gen. John Dewitt's famous sentiment that "a Jap is a Jap."

If, Mr. President, we as a nation fail to learn from this tragic experience, history may repeat itself, hiding behind the cloak of national security and persecuting Americans of a particular race or ethnic group or religious group for the actions committed by people of their ancestoral homeland. For example, it is not inconceivable that a possible future conflict with countries south of the border could rouse hostile feelings against millions of Hispanic Americans in this country. I hope that this would never occur.

Mr. President, the goal of S. 1009 is to benefit all citizens of our Nation by educating our citizens to preclude this event from occurring again to any other ethnic or religious group or any person suspected of being less than a loyal citizen. This bill reinforces the strength of our Constitution by reaffirming our commitment to upholding the constitutional rights of all our citizens. So, respectfully, I strongly urge its passage and in so doing once again commend and congratulate my distinguished colleague from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Will the distinguished senior Senator from Hawaii yield?

Mr. INOUYE. I will be very pleased to yield to the Senator.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I congratulate the senior Senator from Hawaii for his excellent statement. Coming from one who served in the 442d Regimental Combat Team, the most highly decorated military unit in the entire history of the United States, and having been highly decorated with the second highest award, the Distinguished Service Cross, and having sacrificed an arm in that war, I believe what the senior Senator from Hawaii has to say should be taken most seriously. I do hope that our colleagues will take him in all seriousness and defeat the Hecht amendment. I once more congratulate my senior colleague from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. I thank the Senator for his generous comments.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, while I understand the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, I hope that the Senate will disapprove it. The recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians were clear. They found that there had not been compensation for the damages and losses suffered by the Japanese-Americans and Aleut people.

I recounted yesterday what happened when the United States military removed 900 American citizens—Aleuts, who lived on the Aleutian chain and the Pribilof Islands—from their homes and took them to abandoned canneries and gold mining camps in southeastern Alaska.

Not many people understand the distances in our State. Attu and Kiska, which the Japanese invaded, are the most western islands in the Aleutian chain. The military saw fit to remove all Aleuts from all of the islands. Alaskans believed they did that because they wanted to occupy the islands and just did not want any local people in their way.

The Pribilof Islands were over 1,000 miles from the two islands the Japanese had taken. The Japanese never attempted to move further up along the Aleutian chain. They made an invasion of those two islands and fortified them. But there was really no necessity to remove these people.

I agree with what the Senator from Nevada said, having lived through that period, that there was a lot of rumor and fear. I remember as a young boy in California at that time going out of the house at night when the antiaircraft guns were shooting at the Moon, literally, in Los Angeles. There was no Japanese attack being made upon Los Angeles, but somone had reported there was. Antiaircraft batteries from all over Los Angeles lit up the sky for 2 or 3 hours that night until they found out there were no Japanese planes in the vicinity and no enemy to shoot at at all. It was a period of really intense hysteria. There is no question about that.

But let us put this in perspective. Let us assume that the Japanese came to Baltimore. The action of the United States military removing the Aleuts would be like going to Chicago and then going west from Chicago about 1,000 miles and taking everyone between Chicago and Denver and moving them out of harm's way.

The record is clear that in terms of this internment—and it was an internment—was for the convenience of the Government. And these people, because they were of native descent, were taken and interned. They were kept for 2 to 3 years in those camps. In those days, Alaska was a territory, under wartime conditions, and it was not possible to travel.

I related yesterday how one of my friends, Flore Lekanoff, was taken from one of those camps in southeastern Alaska back to the Pribilof Islands to hunt for seals for the military. He was never paid for that. He was never recognized as being in the service of the Government. None of these people were treated as though they were in the service of the Government. They were literally just shoved aside.

I also knew a great many people, I knew them personally, who were sent to Santa Anita, another of these Japanese-American relocation camps.

This bill provides compensation that the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians found was warranted. When I was chairman of our subcommittee I held hearings in Los Angeles. They lasted for several days. We have conducted hearings on this subject now for a series of Congresses, and the strange thing is, Mr. President, that the circle of those who suffered narrows. And because of deaths the number of people affected by this legislation is much different than it would have been even 3 years ago when I held those hearings. In fact, several Aleuts have died just in the last few months as we've been working to get this bill to the floor.

I believe that the Senator's amendment is clear. It says that, as a nation, let us apologize, but let us ignore all of the losses, all of our failures, to compensate the victims.

As our committee report points out, in August 1944, President Roosevelt allocated $200,000 from Federal funds for rehabilitation of the Aleutian and Pribilof Islands. Some 900 people had spent 2 to 3 years confined, many of them working without any compensation at all from the Federal Government, their homes destroyed, their churches destroyed, and the Federal Government in its kindness allocated $200,000 to rehabilitate the Aleutian and Pribilof Islands. That included only $25,000 for all damages suffered by the Aleuts.

The Commission reports to us that there was substantial damage, and it still exists. As I remarked yesterday, the only place where the U.S. flag flew in World War II that has not been cleared of World War II debris is in the Aleutian Islands. Congress in its wisdom has made a great portion of that area a wildlife refuge. It is a bird sanctuary. But it is unique in that it is the only bird sanctuary in the world that no one can go to because it is still contaminated with World War II ammunition, mines, and other devices that were brought to the Aleutian Islands, not by the Japanese but by the United States.

I find the amendment of the Senator from Nevada one that I strenuously oppose because it removes the mechanism to settle this issue now. Most of these people that are going to be benefited by this bill are past 60. They have waited a long, long time. Most of them never recovered financially, particularly the people I represent in the Aleutian chain. Many are still destitute. This settlement is the final act to close this chapter of history and to try to make restitution for that period of hysteria.

The people who made those decisions were good Americans. They were defending the country. They made mistakes. President Ford was the first President to make the finding that mistakes were made in World War II with regard to Japanese-Americans and Aleuts. I think it was important that President Ford made that finding.

We now know from the Commission's record that the Attorney General warned the President that what was to be done was not constitutional. The former Director of the FBI, J. Edgar Hoover, notified the President that the order was not necessary from the point of view of intelligence or any type of activity, and that it was contrary to the best interests of the Government at that time.

The Secretary of War expressed his belief that the program was "ill advised, unnecessary, and unnecessarily cruel," and Milton Eisenhower, the former President's brother, who was Director of Wartime Relocation, described the evacuation and detention as "an inhuman mistake."

The late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Earl Warren, who was then Attorney General of California, stated that, "I have since deeply regretted the removal order and my own testimony advocating it because it was not in keeping with our American concept of freedom and the rights of citizens."

I think the record is clear that there ought not to be any dispute that our country made a serious mistake. While I support the apology that is contained in the bill, that is not sufficient. If the Senator's amendment passes, who is going to restore those public buildings that were destroyed and have never yet been replaced? Who is going to compensate these people who spent time living in the abandoned canneries and gold mines in southeastern Alaska—whole families?

I think the amendment should be defeated because again, with great affection for my friend from Nevada, the Hecht amendment will gut this bill. The provisions which the amendment would delete are the provisions we fought over. We had hearings on it throughout the country. Everyone has had a chance to review it.

Strangely, the amendment would retain the findings of the bill that these people suffered enormous damages and losses and have not been compensated adequately, but would remove the compensation.

I hope the Senate will reject the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Matsunaga legislation and in opposition to the Hecht amendment.

I think it is difficult to add to the eloquent arguments made by my friend from Alaska and my friend from Hawaii as they have stated, clearly and succinctly, that this is a good Nation, one with a proud history, but by no means perfect, because we are, as human institutions, subject to all the fallibilities of human beings, particularly those of fear, as were all of us at the time of the attack on Pearl Harbor.

What ensued was a terrible failure of judgment. At the time, it seemed entirely reasonable, when we had been taken unaware and suffered a catastrophic blow, to be suspicious of all those who, in the fear of the moment, might in some way be suspect as contributing to further espionage against the United States.

As we have heard from the Senator from Alaska, those in charge of our security, those charged with the responsibility for collecting domestic intelligence, found that we had very quickly overreacted, perhaps reasonably so in the panic of the moment, or, if not reasonably, at least understandably. But, Mr. President, having made that mistake, we persisted in it for 4 long years and perpetrated on a group of loyal Americans one of the great travesties in our history. We kept behind barbed wire the fathers, the mothers, the uncles, the aunts, the younger brothers and sisters of the most celebrated and highly decorated combat units in American history. We kept them behind barbed wire, living at Santa Anita and other places.

We now acknowledge the tragic error of judgment that required, in that moment of panic, that we take protective action, rounding up Aleuts and Americans of Japanese ancestry who posed no threat, and who, to the contrary, gave us their sons as volunteers.

Mr. President, the question before us is whether or not, in order to make the adequate apology that is contained in this legislation, we are required to make adequate compensation. The answer is that we do.

A moment ago the Senator from Hawaii said, "How do you compensate for the psychic suffering, for the pain, the anguish, the incalculable anguish, suffered by those interned in those camps?" It is a rhetorical question; because it is difficult, if not impossible, to make whole by compensation those who suffered the losses he described. However, as the Senator from Alaska has pointed out, there were losses that involved property.

I can tell you that they were commonplace in California. The generation that had migrated to the United States from Japan and founded small businesses, groceries, and little shops, those small farmers who came to this country and who then raised the next generation of Americans who gave their lives gallantly in combat in Italy, suffered terrible depredations. They lost those businesses, in many cases. They never were able to return to those family farms.

Mr. President, I do not know how one can generalize a prescription and do perfect equity in every case. And that is what this bill attempts to do. But I can only say that I think the $20,000 it seeks as the reward for the suffering and the property lost involved is in no way an exaggeration of what actually was lost and suffered. Indeed, I would guess that in most cases where property loss occurred, $20,000 is a small fraction of the actual loss in the value of that property, compounded over the years.

As the Senator from Alaska has said, those who will be the recipients of these awards, in almost every case, are now 60 years or more of age. It is a declining population, declining in number.

The Senator from Nevada quite correctly points out that we are called upon to set and keep priorities in a time of deficit reduction. I say to him, with the greatest respect—and to others who make the same argument—that the first call upon a nation is that it honor its just obligations. This is a just obligation, an effort on the part of the United States, belatedly, to make an apology to loyal Americans and to right an injustice which, in a moment of panic, was visited upon them. In that view, it must be seen as a priority, a high priority, one that we are late in recognizing, and one that we should, without further delay, not just acknowledge but bring to fruition, so that this debt can be paid. We cannot close this chapter, because we should not forget.

There are certain lessons in human history that the next generation and the next and the next should be reminded of. These were not evil people among our leadership who were guilty of this error in judgment. They were decent Americans, moved by what they thought to be reasonable fears to take what they thought to be legitimate protective measures. But they were wrong. Afterwards perhaps, it should have been clear to them that they were wrong, that injustice continued.

As we must never forget the Holocaust and what the indifference and the timidity of good and decent people permitted to occur in Europe throughout the duration of World War II, so we must recognize that good and decent people had a lapse of judgment and, very candidly, a lapse of the mind, of spiritual courage that is necessary to right these wrongs in this country where we prize justice, in this country where we have welcomed succeeding waves of immigrants, recognizing that in each came the richest resource of this Nation, adding to our strength by adding to our diversity, even as these new generations of immigrants sought to be assimilated and take advantage of the opportunity that has been the fundamental meaning of this land for one wave of immigrants after another.

So, Mr. President, we should pay this debt. We should acknowledge this injustice. We should right this wrong. And in order to make this apology adequately, this measure of compensation, it seems to me, is entirely warranted. I hope my colleagues will view it as in fact we should, as an urgent priority, a call upon our own national honor.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. WILSON. With pleasure.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I wish to thank the distinguished junior Senator from California for being one of the early cosponsors of S. 1009 and for his most persuasive statement just made not only for the provisions of the bill but against the Hecht amendment.

I wish to thank him once again, and I do hope that what he has said will influence those who are not cosponsors of this measure and vote against the Hecht amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Hawaii. He has been most generous in his comment. I think I should thank him for the great tenacity of purpose on his part that has brought this legislation to the floor with the number of cosponsors that have been added to it, but perhaps most significantly I should point out that he and his colleague from Hawaii represent I think the very kind of courage, physical and moral, that was demonstrated not only years ago on the field of battle on behalf of the United States, but the kind of courage and moral stamina on the floor of the Senate that they have both so often demonstrated.

It is, I think, perhaps the clearest vindication of my statement just made about the good fortune of the United States in being able to welcome to our shores the sons and daughters of immigrants who perhaps understand better than many of us who are native born the meaning of this country.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I thank the Senator from California.

Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HECHT].

The Hecht amendment would delete from the bill funds provided to compensate each of about 60,000 surviving former internees and would also delete funds provided for the establishment of a "civil liberties education fund." Further, the Hecht amendment would delete title III of the bill, pertaining to compensation for Aleuts, in its entirety.

Those who contend that monetary compensation is an inappropriate way to redress this longstanding injustice overlook the fact that monetary compensatory remedies are an integral part of our system of jurisprudence. It has long been regarded as proper for the courts to award monetary damages to individuals who have been unjustifiably injured. The amounts of damages vary widely, of course, ranging from several hundred dollars to well over $100,000, and the vast majority of such awards are for wrongful detentions of only a few days. To cite only a few examples, in the case of Bucher v. Krause (200 F. 2d 576, 7th Cir., 1952), a man wrongfully arrested following a barroom scuffle and held in jail for just 1 day was awarded $50,000 in compensatory damages; in Globe Shopping v. Williams (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), a shopper falsely arrested and imprisoned for only 6 hours was awarded $35,000 in compensatory damages; and in Skillern v. Stewart (379 S.W. 2d 687, Tex. Civ. App. 1964), a woman who was falsely charged with shoplifting by her employer, detained for several hours, and assaulted, was awarded $10,000 in compensatory damages plus $10,000 in punitive damages. In Dellums versus Powell, the case stemming from the arrest and detention of demonstrators during the anti-war demonstration in Washington, DC on May 1, 1972, compensatory damages in amounts ranging from $120 to $1,800 were awarded to those detained for a few hours up to 3 days.

In addition to these actions by the courts, Congress has acted to redress the claims of civilians and military personnel held captive by the enemy in World War II, the Korean conflict, and the war in Vietnam. Civilian Federal employees who were held hostage in Iran for less than 18 months were awarded compensation in the amount of $22,000 per person by act of Congress.

Mr. President, the American citizens of Japanese ancestry who were the victims of the Federal Government's wartime policy were imprisoned for 3 years or more not by an enemy, but by their own government, the United States of America. It seems to me that it is equally important, if not more important, that we provide monetary compensation as was done in cases I just cited. To do any less would demean the serious injustice which they suffered; $20,000, equal to $3,000 in 1945 dollars, is truly not too much for individuals who were falsely incarcerated for 3 years or longer.

During hearings of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, which came out with that excellent report which all members have in their offices, former internees, many telling their stories for the first time, told of infants, young mothers, and elderly persons who died for lack of adequate medical care and facilities; of families who were separated, with elderly parents or in-laws going to one camp while their married childern were sent to another; of large families forced to live together in one small room; of the constant, nagging uncertainty about the future, both near and long term; of the strains which this placed on their families and on the close-knit Japanese American community as a whole; and, most dramatically, of internees who were shot and killed by camp guards because they inadvertently wandered too close to the camp barbed wire fences. In one such incident, an elderly man and his grandson were playing pitch-catch ball near the fence late one afternoon. Under the camp rules, one was never to be seen between the two barbed wire fences after 6 p.m. Although it was after 6 o'clock, on this day it was a bright summer day and it was still broad daylight. The grandfather having missed the ball chased after it and when he got in between the two fences the guard up on the watchtower yelled, "Get back," and the elderly gentleman said, "Oh, I am only going for the ball," and continued his chase; whereupon, the guard up on the watchtower fired the machinegun killing the elderly man instantly. His grandson and members of his family still bear the scars of that incident.

And I, myself, become overly emotional when I think about it even to this day.

It is also reported, Mr. President, that an elderly American veteran of World War I committed suicide because he was so ashamed of being branded as "disloyal" to the United States. Indeed, the stigma of disloyalty has haunted Japanese-Americans for the past 45 years and it is one of the principal reasons that they are seeking congressional action to remove that cloud over their heads.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Senator yield.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I am happy to yield.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding because I think it is important for the Senate to realize that there are 10 of us from the west coast and the two offshore States. All of us but one were alive and lived through this period. All 10 of us have joined together in this bill. None of us that lived through this period have any question about the statement that the Senator from Hawaii has just made. We know of our own knowledge what we saw in those days as young men.

The thing that is appalling to me is that it has been so long, Mr. President, since so many people have admitted the mistake, and so many people now know that the distinguished leaders of the time urged the military not to do this—the Attorney General, the Secretary of State, the FBI director.

The comments that the Senator has just made have been related to me by Japanese friends of mine that I have known since I was a child—people that went to school with us, as I said yesterday, people that we have worked with. And each one of them has said to me the same thing that the distinguished junior Senator has just said: "How can we explain to our children what they were doing living in stables, living in camps on the desert or, in the case of my Aleut constitutents, living in places, which were built to be used for 2 or 3 months in the summertime, for 2 to 3 years, when they had done no wrong at all?"

It is not just the generations that were in the camps that have been scarred; it has been the children of those people. It is important now for us not to just say we are sorry, but, as a government, to recognize the compensatory system of our system of justice, as the Senator has said.

I do not think we can—and I know others are going to speak about this—I do not think we can really get down to the point of being jurors and saying how much this compensation should be.

But we hired exports. The Commission hired experts to determine what these people would have earned while they were in the camps; how much they would have been able to save from earnings in those times—and wartime earnings were pretty good.

Now, there is a question here about the compensation side which to me is a difficult thing to grasp. I just want the Senator from Hawaii to understand that I do not understand people who are willing to say we made a mistake, we were wrong, but are not going to do anything about it. If you were in court—and incidentally there is still one case pending, maybe two—in court, the jurors would have the duty of determining what the compensation should be not only in terms of actual compensatory damages, but in terms of punitive damages, too.

We are not going to just hand out money. Those people who apply, who believe that they are entitled to this money and need this money, will be able to get this money.

I do not know how many of our Aleut people will apply, and I do not know how many Japanese-Americans will apply. But the concept is that they can apply for these damages.

I sort of interrupted my friend, but he was choking up, as I want to do in this debate once in a while, and I wanted him to know I share his emotions. I think everybody who lived through that period of time, who had personal friends that literally disappeared, and then came back after the war, can only be appalled.

I think the Senate should know that while this is not a regional consideration, there is not a Senator on this floor who is from the area involved who lived through it that is not an original cosponsor of this legislation, along with the two Senators from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I thank the Senator from Alaska for coming to my relief and for his major role in bringing about the passage of the bill. The way the bill has been reported out of the Government Relations Committee is one in which the senior Senator from Alaska has played a major role. I thank him for that. I join him in the statements he makes.

Mr. President, the sponsors of the bill do not pretend that history can be erased, but the measure would provide for the first time an official acknowledgement of the grave injustice which was done, and it would provide token monetary compensation to those who suffered irreparable losses. Without such compensation the bill would be meaningless.

Mr. President, perhaps of greater significance, as I stated yesterday, is that S. 1009 would remove forever a longstanding blot on that great Constitution of the United States, and its passage, as reported by the committee, will prove that our beloved country is great enough to acknowledge and correct its past mistakes.

Mr. President, I urge the defeat of the Hecht amendment.

I yield the floor.

Mr. WARNER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WIRTH). The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment.

I understand my distinguished colleague from Alaska is preparing to leave the floor. He touched on some of the concerns that I have. I have a twofold concern about the pending proposed legislation: First, the dollars which are addressed in the amendment; and, second, the language in the bill which I find has a judgmental tone about it. And I quote the bill, "a failure of political leadership" at the time.

So really, in effect, what we are doing is trying to judge the actions of our predecessors who stood on this very floor in that period of time and made the decisions which we are reviewing here in hindsight so many years thereafter.

Congress was involved in this decision, as well as the President. And as I understand it, the Supreme Court was involved in a review process.

That is all three branches of the Government: executive branch, legislative branch, and the judicial branch.

Somehow, instead of saying that we cast a blanket indictment on the judgment of those men and women, honorable and exercising their best judgment in light of the facts of the time, it seems to me that we should move with some caution here today.

While I did not live on the west coast, I was a young man right here in the Nation's Capital in northern Virginia. I remember the period very well. Before I entered the Navy in World War II, I can recall our home right here in the Nation's Capital was, like every other home, equipped with curtains that we drew down at night such that the modest amount of electricity that was used in our home could not go through the cracks of the windows. This city lived in a blackout in the aftermath of Pearl Harbor. That I remember ever so vividly, the Nation's Capital in blackout.

So I am wondering if we should, with some reflection, go slowly as we pronounce judgment on the leaders of the three branches of our Government at that time.

I have heard the statements made by our distinguished colleagues from Hawaii, and indeed joined in by the distinguished Senator from Alaska in reciting the facts and the hardship and the suffering for which we all have compassion today as, indeed, I am sure Americans did at that time. And we should bring out those cases today, most poignantly, as our distinguished colleague from Hawaii has done. That is a very important part of the debate that we have here today and I respect him for it and I respect the survivors. But I am wondering whether or not we should not reflect a little more caution, a little more understanding on those who sat in this Chamber.

The President at that time was a very courageous man. Indeed, Members of the Supreme Court, and of the Congress all of whom rendered a measure of judgment on this situation—Does my colleague wish to respond?

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to that. I do have to go to a committee meeting; I was just called there. I am happy to stay to make sure we have a good dialog with my friend.

Congress' role was to pass a law to authorize the Federal Government to enforce compliance with directives issued by Executive order. It did not approve this order. It approved a general concept of Executive orders and gave the authority to enforce them.

The Supreme Court refused to uphold a challenge to the legality of the orders that were issued under that general authority that Congress had passed. The Supreme Court has not ruled, to my knowledge, yet, on whether or not the Japanese-Americans or the Aleuts are entitled to compensation for the wrongs that were committed.

Let us look at the question whether we are taking some action now which would cast a challenge upon the decisions that were made then. In 1976, President Ford rescinded the Executive order. Mind you, it had been in effect since 1942 to 1976. He rescinded the Executive order and he stated that the wartime measures under the order were a setback to the fundamental principles on which this Government was founded and they involved national mistakes.

The role of the Commission was to provide us with a record of what happened at that time. Although the President signed the Executive order giving the Secretary of War and the commanders of the military the power to exclude any and all persons from designated areas in order to provide security against sabotage and espionage, the Attorney General at that time argued that the total exclusion of the Japanese from the west coast was unnecessary.

The Director of the FBI notified the President's people that ethnic Japanese—Japanese-Americans—presented no threat to the national security.

In terms of our Aleut people, a local commander took it upon himself to move 900 people who were almost 1,000 miles from the invasion area on Attu and Kiska 2,000 miles away to southeastern Alaska and dump them off at abandoned canneries and gold mine sites.

To my knowledge, we have already acknowledged we made mistakes. All the way through these hearings I conducted, I cannot remember one person, even our former colleague Mr. Goodell, who disagrees with these actions.

Mr. WARNER. For the record, that should be known.

Mr. STEVENS. He was a former Senator from California. But he did not say there were no mistakes made.

Mr. WARNER. I am not arguing there were no mistakes made. I question this blanket indictment proposed to be cast by this proposed action on the Members of the Senate and the House and the Federal judiciary and indeed the executive branch. You point out there was a division of opinion in the executive branch, as there is on most major subjects.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think it is a difference of opinion, Mr. President, when the Secretary of State says the forced evacuation of citizens was an injustice; the Attorney General at the time said the program was "ill-advised, unnecessary, and unnecessarily cruel;" the Director of Relocation said it was an "inhumane mistake;" the then-attorney general of California has indicated when he became Chief Justice that he "deeply regretted" the order because he thought it was in violation of our duty to our citizens.

I do not think we are attacking anybody. I am not part of an attack of anybody or the Government itself. I served under President Roosevelt and I was proud to do so. I think he was a fantastic wartime Commander. The problem is not whether he was a fantastic Commander. The question is whether the Government, acting under his order, made a mistake.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, he made the decision. The President of the United States of America made the decision after receiving the best advice from his advisers. So the buck stops there.

Mr. STEVENS. No; he made the decision to issue the order, as I indicated, that people who were in areas designated under the order as being areas—and the west coast was totally designated—could be removed by military commanders if they were presenting a problem as far as security is concerned. He was particularly concerned with sabotage and espionage. There is not one single thing in the record that indicates either the Japanese-Americans in California or the Aleuts in Alaska were charged with any breach of internal security, any sabotage, or took any action that would warrant their being included under that order.

I think the Senate ought to understand. We are not challenging the order that was made to arrest those who were a risk in terms of internal security. We are challenging the decisions that were made by the military commanders, basically on a local level, to intern people. As I said, I remember the time when they took the people from my high school and put them in Santa Anita. They moved the horses out and put the families in.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I concede that it was an error in judgment by the President of the United States. He should have listened to those advisers who cautioned him against it.

Mr. STEVENS. It was not the President of the United States.

Mr. WARNER. He signed the Executive order.

Mr. STEVENS. He signed a valid Executive order. It was upheld by the Supreme Court. It was valid in this Senator's judgment. It said arrest those people who are a threat to the internal security of the United States, who pose a threat of commiting acts of sabotage or espionage.

But what I am saying is there is no record that there was any justification in taking the Japanese-Americans or the Aleuts under that order. That was not a mistake of the President of the United States. It was a mistake of the arresting officers. It has since been acknowledged as a mistake by a subsequent President of the United States, President Ford, in revoking that order. He said there were serious mistakes—grievous mistakes made under that order—and I would hope my friend would accept the distinction, Mr. President.

We are not challenging history. We are not challenging the concept that a country has a right to protect itself against sabotage and espionage. That is not the case.

But show me one shred of evidence that these people, the Japanese-Americans or the Aleuts, were charged with either espionage or a threat to internal security and I will withdraw my name from this act.

Mr. HECHT. Will the Senator from Alaska yield?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes.

Mr. HECHT. We are not questioning that all in my amendment. What we are talking about is compensation for these people. Now, after all of these years, are we saying: "We have harmed you? We have done things we should not have done, but here is $20,000 tax free, and we will forget everything"? Is that what you are trying to say?

We agree in hindsight that it was wrong. I am from a small town in Missouri—Cape Girardeau, MO. I remember very well Pearl Harbor Day. There was not one American woman who did not have tears in her eyes because they either had children in the service or were soon going to be there.

In this particular little city of Cape Girardeau, there was one Japanese couple who lived on the outskirts. Luckily, the police were able to grab them and move them away because there was a lynch mob that would have reached their house within 2 hours.

I do not think America has ever had a day where the turmoil, the confusion in their minds was so violent. People were in a hysteria. We had been attacked. Let us not sit here in the tranquility of the U.S. Senate 45 years later and think what America was like on December 7, 1941. The President had to make a decision. He did.

The Senator mentioned compensation. Then in a court of law, there must be compensation. This is not a court of law. This is the U.S. Senate.

I have been elected by the people of Nevada, by the people who are taxpayers from Nevada. What I am saying is under our deficit today, the restrictions, and what we are doing, we cannot afford this type of a $1.3 billion or $1.5 billion, whatever it might amount to. I cannot in good conscience go back to my State of Nevada and tell the survivors of Bataan, Iwo Jima—all of those battles in the South Pacific, in Asia—and tell them we have forgotten you, but what we are doing is compensating the people who we moved into camps; their houses were ruined.

We cannot forget the American veterans. We are apologizing, but what we are saying is, let us take the monetary part out of it. Many of these people are multimillionaires today. Are they going to——

Mr. STEVENS. Mr President, I yielded. Let me disabuse that myth. I know of no multimillionaires on the islands of the Aleutians, and I know of very few in the Japanese-American group that we are talking about. There may be some newcomers into the ranks of millionaires among the younger ones, but I do not know of any of these multimillionaires.

Mr. President, let me also disabuse my friend of our mistreatment of the people who are survivors of Bataan and who are veterans. I am a veteran. I have not abandoned my cause to support the veteran on this floor. Show one veteran we have abandoned. We have laws here to protect and assist the veterans. We provide hospitals. We have attempted to live up to our obligation to our veterans. That is not a subject that ought to come into consideration here.

I have no problem facing my veterans and telling them that I have tried to help right a wrong that was committed when we were fighting that war. Did you know that the people who were taken from the Aleutian Islands to Japan and incarcerated by the Japanese were compensated by the American Government? Did you know that?

Mr. President, I cannot understand why we are arguing about compensation for the survivors. This is not going to dependents. It is only going to those people who still survive. It is not anywhere near the amount that the Commission found would be necessary to fully compensate these people, but it is there for those who feel they need help now to make an application and get this amount from their Government.

Imagine the people from the Aleutians who were taken and put into forced labor for the period of time that they were kept on those islands. They received no compensation at all. When they got back, for all of their islands, which stretch 2,400 miles into the Pacific Ocean—the Government, in its wisdom, set aside $200,000 to repair and replace the homes that were destroyed by the military and the churches that were destroyed, and included $25,000 for compensation for 900 people for 2 to 3 years. We are talking about common sense in terms of compensation.

I went over this. I will be glad to go over it with the Senator if he would like to know how the Commission went through the process of determining how much money should be included here. The Aleuts and the Japanese-Americans are not being fully compensated under this bill. I tried to make the point that this is not what a jury would award. If you want to send these claims to the courts and let the court award those damages, you better believe you are talking about hundreds of billions of dollars now by the time that money would be brought forward and indexed from the time of the forties.

Mr. WARNER. Did the Senator say hundreds of billions?

Mr. STEVENS. Hundreds of billions.

Mr. HECHT. Hundreds of billions?

Mr. STEVENS. If it was properly indexed in terms of actual compensatory and punitive losses for what a jury should have awarded in the forties.

Mr. WARNER. I know the Senator has to leave. My major concern again is reflecting on the history. The Senator from Alaska has taken issue with the Senator from Virginia that the action which is pending before the Senate today is a blanket indictment of our political leadership at that time.

I would like the Senator to turn to page 33 of the bill, if he would. In "Findings and Purpose," section 1, part 4:

> The internment of the individual of Japanese ancestry was caused by racial prejudice, war hysteria, and a failure of political leadership.

Are we to sit here 45 to 47 years later and make that blanket assertion on the entire Government of the United States, the three branches that had some measure of involvement in this case?

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if that is directed to me, I will point out that that portion of the bill is not affected by the Hecht amendment.

Mr. WARNER. I understand that, but the Senator is about to leave the floor, and he kindly said we could engage in a colloquy.

Mr. STEVENS. I believe that is correct. I believe at the time there was wartime hysteria. I just described before the Senator came out that I remember as a young man coming out of the house at night because all the antiaircraft guns in Los Angeles—which were near at that time and were shooting at planes that were supposed to be there, and there never were planes there. You talk about hysteria; there was hysteria on the west coast.

Second, there was racial prejudice. It is manifest in this action that was taken at the time by taking these people, rounding them up, turning out the racehorses and putting them in stables and keeping them there for years at a time.

Mr. WARNER. I concede those wrongs, but is the Senator willing to have this Chamber go on record today that that was a "failure of political leadership"?

Mr. STEVENS. I am because I believe the Government was set up as a Government of laws under men who can make mistakes, and mistakes were made.

We already indicated no one argued with the statement of President Ford that there were mistakes made, and when he rejected that Executive order in 1976, he specifically made that finding. He made a finding that there were national mistakes.

National mistakes only come about because of a failure of political leadership. I believe that that statement is correct.

Beyond that, Mr. President, it seems to me—and I will close, if I may, with my friend unless he has some other questions—it seems to me that the purpose of the bill is to try and find a way to implement the recognition of a Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians. We passed a law to authorize this Commission to go into this in depth.

It was a bipartisan Commission of distinguished Americans. They made those findings. The Senator from Virginia asked me if we are supposed to approve this statement. We are approving the statement made in the Commission's report. As a matter of fact, the Commission's report goes a little further, if you really want to know. I would urge Senators to read that report. That Commission made these findings and this bill is a bill to accept those findings and to implement their recommendations. I believe the House has gone on record accepting those findings. To fail to do so now on the floor of the Senate I think would similarly be a problem as far as political leadership is concerned.

Mr. MATSUNAGA addressed the Chair.

Mr. STEVENS. I would not want to be part of a group that did not accept the findings of this distinguished Commission, a Commission that was authorized to make these findings and did make them.

Mr. MATSUNAGA addressed the Chair.%

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska has the floor.

Mr. MATSUNAGA addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, in response to the question raised by the Senator from Virginia, who seemed to indicate that we ought to take a little more time in studying this matter before we take any action in the Congress, let me point out that Congress waited 38 years and finally in 1980, because there were those among us here who believed that a study of the entire issue ought to be made, created the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians. So the findings of that Commission are what the Congress was seeking, and this bill, S. 1009, is merely to implement the recommendations of that Commission.

The Commission found, I will point out to the Senator from Virginia, by uncovering secret documents in the Archives in 1982, that naval intelligence and the FBI had recommended to the President of the United States that no action be taken with reference to the recommendation of General Dewitt, who was in command of the west coast, who recommended the evacuation and internment of Japanese-Americans and their resident alien parents, because there was no military necessity or any danger to national security. The FBI as well as naval intelligence came out with a report, as was pointed out by the Senator from Alaska, that there was not a single case of sabotage, espionage, fifth column activity before, during or after the attack on Pearl Harbor, and it was a finding of the Commission that it was due to war hysteria, racial prejudice, and failure on the part of our political leaders that the mass evacuation and internment took place.

So I appeal to the Senator from Virginia, who incidentally was an original cosponsor of the measure, to read this comprehensive report, which he has in his office, I am sure, titled "Personal Justice Denied," which is the report of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, and a smaller edition which sets forth the recommendations of that Commission. As the Senator from Virginia well knows, the Commission consisted of a distinguished panel of judges, a former member of the Supreme Court, a former Senator, and a former Congressman.

So that I think the suggestion that action be further delayed until such time as we make further study is not at all warranted.

Mr. WARNER addressed the Chair.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Virginia were in no way intended to be dilatory or to prolong judgment on these questions. I think it is most appropriate that we are now at this juncture. This Commission has done a very credible job. I do not dispute the facts. I am not prepared to be in any way dilatory today, not to allow this measure to go forward, to be voted upon.

It is just that somehow I feel obligated to rise and in some respects defend the Members of this Chamber, members of the executive branch, and to a certain extent the members of the judicial branch who at that time, in light of the facts, felt they were rendering the best judgment they could on behalf of this Nation. The way these findings are drawn strikes this Senator as a rather severe indictment given the unusual nature of that period, unlike any in the history of this Nation. Therefore, I say Senators should pause to reflect just for a moment on that particular part of the bill that troubles me when that blanket indictment is cast to the political leadership of the United States of America. At that time they perhaps did not have as much opportunity or time to assess all the evidence with respect to these poor people, for whom I have compassion, for whom I join the Senator in saying we should rectify the wrong.

But given the circumstances of our fleet resting on the bottom at Pearl Harbor, Bataan, and other events that preceded some of these judgments, I can see how their time was fully occupied with the more pressing issues of that period.

Mr. President, I have located a copy of the statements made by President Ford on February 19, 1976, together with Proclamation No. 4417, which he issued at that time. I think it would be helpful if I took a few minutes to read them.

REMARKS UPON SIGNING A PROCLAMATION CONCERNING JAPANESE-AMERICAN INTERNMENT DURING WORLD WAR II, FEBRUARY 19, 1976

February 19 is the anniversary of a very, very sad day in American history. It was on that date in 1942 that Executive Order 9066 was issued resulting in the uprooting of many, many loyal Americans. Over 100,000 persons of Japanese ancestry were removed from their homes, detained in special camps, and eventually relocated.

We now know what we should have known then—not only was that evacuation wrong but Japanese-Americans were and are loyal Americans. On the battlefield and at home the names of Japanese-Americans have been and continue to be written in America's history for the sacrifices and the contributions they have made to the well-being and to the security of this, our common Nation.

Executive Order 9066 ceased to be effective at the end of World War II. Because there was no formal statement of its termination, there remains some concern among Japanese-Americans that there yet may be some life in that obsolete document. The proclamation [4417] that I am signing here today should remove all doubt on that matter.

I call upon the American people to affirm with me that unhyphenated American promise that we have learned from the tragedy of that long ago experience—forever to treasure liberty and justice for each individual American and resolve that this kind of error shall never be made again.

Mr. President, I certainly agree with every statement made by President Ford in his opening remarks. I likewise agree with every statement made in proclamation, which I shall now read:

THE PRESIDENT: PROCLAMATION 4417, AN AMERICAN PROMISE BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

In this Bicentennial Year, we are commemorating the anniversary dates of many of the great events in American history. An honest reckoning, however, must include a recognition of our national mistakes as well as our national achievements. Learning from our mistakes is not pleasant, but as a great philosopher once admonished, we must do so if we want to avoid repeating them.

February 19th is the anniversary of a sad day in American history. It was on that date in 1942, in the midst of the response to the hostilities that began on December 7, 1941, that Executive Order No. 9066 was issued, subsequently enforced by the criminal penalties of a statute enacted March 21, 1942, resulting in the uprooting of loyal Americans. Over one hundred thousand persons of Japanese ancestry were removed from their homes, detained in special camps, and eventually relocated.

The tremendous effort by the War Relocation Authority and concerned Americans for the welfare of these Japanese-Americans may add perspective to that story, but it does not erase the setback to fundamental American principles. Fortunately, the Japanese-American community in Hawaii was > spared the indignities suffered by those on our mainland.

> We now know what we should have known then—not only was that evacuation wrong, but Japanese-Americans were and are loyal Americans. On the battlefield and at home, Japanese-Americans—names like Hamada, Mitsumori, Marimoto, Noguchi, Yamasaki, Kido, Munemori and Miyamura—have been and continue to be written in our history for the sacrifices and the contributions they have made to the well-being and security of this, our common Nation.

We have added here today to that list the name of our distinguished colleague, the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE].

I continue:

> The Executive order that was issued on February 19, 1942, was for the sole purpose of prosecuting the war with the Axis Powers, and ceased to be effective with the end of those hostilities. Because there was no formal statement of its termination, however, there is concern among many Japanese-Americans that there may yet be some life in that obsolete document. I think it appropriate, in this our Bicentennial Year, to remove all doubt on that matter, and to make clear our commitment in the future.
> Now, therefore, I, Gerald R. Ford, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim that all the authority conferred by Executive Order No. 9066 terminated upon the issuance of Proclamation No. 2714, which formally proclaimed the cessation of the hostilities of World War II on Decmeber 31, 1946.
> I call upon the American people to affirm with me this American Promise—that we have learned from the tragedy of that long-ago experience forever to treasure liberty and justice for each individual American, and resolve that this kind of action shall never again be repeated.
> In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this nineteenth day of February in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred seventy-six, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundredth.
> GERALD R. FORD

Mr. President, I agree, as I said, whole-heartedly with every statement that was made in those two documents.

President Ford accurately and fairly set the record straight about this unfortunate period in American history. Nowhere in President Ford's remarks is there any basis for casting a blanket indictment upon the American political leadership of World War II. The documents which I have just read into the record simply do not support that charge. President Ford addressed this problem properly, and he did it in a balanced way.

I say to my distinguished colleague that I respectfully disagree with portions of the bill as written, which state that there was a failure of judgment. Those judgments were made in one of the darkest hours of the history of this country, at a time when the Nation's Capital itself, was darkened by a blackout, for fear of attack.

I think that as we consider this bill today, we should reflect on the judgments of well-intentioned men and women in this Chamber and the Chamber of the House; the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt; members of the Supreme Court, and other judicial officers who had to review those decisions.

Mr. HECHT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii has the floor.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, in response to the Senator from Virginia, who seems to indicate that this may be an indictment of the executive as well as the legislative branch—that is, the Congress—the Senator from Alaska has pointed out that President Ford, in repealing Executive Order 9066, which authorized the evacuation, made a statement that there was a grave national error made. He acknowledged the error on the part of the Executive

Mr. WARNER. I acknowledge the error, Mr. President.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Here we have 73 cosponsors of the Senate. The House has already passed the measure, H.R. 442, given the number of the regimental combat team. So it is a recognition on the part of the House of Representatives that a grave wrong was imposed upon not only the Japanese-Americans but upon the Aleuts, and it is high time some restitution be made.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I agree a great wrong was done. I join the Senator in that. I have made my point and I think I have perhaps said enough.

Mr. REID and Mr. HECHT addressed the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii has the floor.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HECHT. I thank the Senator. I want to address the crux of my amendment, because we are losing sight of it. What we are doing is debating the wrongs that were committed in 1941, late 1941, 1942, 1943, and 1944.

We are not disputing that in any way. What we are saying is we have a terrible budget deficit. We are scrambling for funds. We are trying to avoid increasing taxes. So far as the Commission, a blue ribbon panel, recommending certain findings, since I have been in the U.S. Senate, now in my sixth year, I have had one panel after another recommending what we should do. We are the elected representatives of our States. We have to look out for the taxpayers of America.

All I am saying is we did commit a wrong. We are apologizing. But after 45 years, it is not necessary to blanket $20,000 tax free to every individual involved.

That is the crux of my amendment. I yield the floor to the Senator from Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii has the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, does the Senator from Hawaii still have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii has the floor. Does the Senator from Hawaii yield the floor?

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I yield the floor.

Mr. REID addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to this amendment and in support of the bill. I would like preliminarily to commend a man who has been a prime mover of S. 1009.

This man has been working diligently for many, many years to right what all of us believe is a wrong perpetrated on Japanese-Americans. He is a man who has personally felt the hand of racism and discrimination and really has overcome it, by evidence of his being a Member of this body. He has shown true patriotism and love for this country and what it stands for through his action, not only on the Senate floor but on the battlefield. I am speaking, of course, of Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA.

Senator MATSUNAGA, along with Senator INOUYE, was a member of the highly decorated and honored 442d Regimental Combat Team. Senator MATSUNAGA, then a first lieutenant and platoon leader, served in combat in North Africa and Europe and was twice wounded in battle.

Among other medals, he received the Bronze Star, the Purple Heart with Oak Leaf Cluster, and the European-African-Middle-Eastern Campaign Medal with four battle stars.

Senator INOUYE likewise showed great courage and heroism in combat in defense of this country. In a terrible firefight, in which his arm was literally torn from his body, he refused to be evacuated and continued to direct his men for the final assault on the objective they were given that day. DANIEL INOUYE received the Distinguished Service Cross, our Nation's second highest award for valor.

This unit, composed of Japanese-Americans, fought valiantly throughout the war, while family and friends were being locked away in internment camps. This internment is a scourge on American history that we would like to put behind us. However, there are many living Americans who cannot forget so easily the burning visions of those internment camps. And no one should forget them. They should stand as an example, at least to this Senator, of how government can get out of hand. They should remind each and every American that our revered Constitution is only a piece of paper without our commitment to uphold its precepts.

I have previously mentioned to my colleagues the case of a fellow Nevadan and friend of mine, Wilson Makabe. He also fought in the 442d and knew firsthand the racism and violation of our basic civil rights during World War II. His case illustrates the personal and constitutional crisis engendered in the internment camps.

Mr. President, from time to time there arise issues which test not only the conscience of a man but that of mankind. They deal, almost always, those great questions, with the rights of an unpopular minority.

The response to that test is the true measure of any nation which has pretentions to civilization. When the roar of the mob provokes a government into curtailing individual rights, then that government has failed in its basic duty.

The Declaration of Independence, as usual, says it best. It is to secure basic rights. The magnificent document tells us that "* * * governments are instituted among men."

Our Nation has not, of course, always been successful in securing those rights. Lynch mobs have on occasion prevailed, and for long periods State, local, or Federal governments denied basic rights to segments of our population.

And yet, Mr. President, in the darkest of times, and at the most hysterical of moments, there was always a calm bulwark for our liberties. That rampart was the U.S. Constitution as of course represented by our Supreme Court. Aberrations occurred in our history. There were times when the Supreme Court did not do perhaps what was right.

There was the infamous Dred Scott decision declaring blacks to be noncitizens, and Plessy versus Ferguson which upheld the segregation doctrine. But by and large, the Court could be relied upon to protect the innocent individual or group against the tyranny of the majority.

It could be relied upon; that is, until December 7, 1941. When the air and naval forces of the Japanese empire struck suddenly and without warning at Pearl Harbor, our Nation was shocked, outraged, and furious. And rightfully so.

Cries for revenge immediately rang out. Demands were made that Japan be punished for her attack. And rightfully so.

What was not right, what could not be justified, was the wellspring of ugly racism which burst to the surface in the Western United States, and especially in the Western United States. Over 100,000 American citizens of Japanese origin were dragged from their homes by the forces of the Government and interned in concentration camps.

No examination was made of their loyalty; no distinction was invoked between legitimate enemy aliens and innocent citizens. That the action taken was blatantly racist is demonstrated by the fact that the same actions were applied neither to Americans of German origin nor to those whose families came from Itlay.

One wonders if anyone in Government considered the incongruity of applying to citizens of Japanese origin the same tests of parentage and grandparentage that Hitler was applying in his despicable war of extermination against European Jewery.

There stood between those citizens and their oppressors in and out of government only that one bulwark of our liberties: the Supreme court. The Court failed the test miserably. It permitted the forced relocation and internment of American citizens on a purely racial basis over the dissent of only one Justice. That one Justice, Robert Jackson, a man whose name we have probably all forgotten, Robert Jackson, who was later to prosecute war criminals at Nuremberg, demonstrated the importance of one judge as the conscience of a nation.

One of the citizens forced from his home is a friend of mine, Wilson Makabe, who lives in Reno, NV. Wilson's response to that degradation and humiliation was magnificent. He enlisted in the U.S. Army. He enlisted from his new home, which was a concentration camp.

When he went home on leave from his military post, he had to visit his family also not at his home of years gone by, but in a concentration camp. Before that, before Wilson, an American soldier could go home to visit his fathers and sisters in their barracks, he was subjected to searches by fellow GI's who were their guards. Wilson fought along with Senator MATSUNAGA and Senator INOUYE. He fought in Italy. His service on the battlefield was very short lived, less than 30 days before he was so badly shot they literally had to ship him home in a cast. They took his leg off, and eventually sent him home.

He got off the boat and called one of his brothers. That is when he learned he had a welcome home present. The neighbors had set fire to his family's home in California and burned it to the ground.

Mr. President, we, as a Congress, are today considering a piece of legislation to not only apologize but to offer reparations to survivors of this dark chapter in the history of this country. Apologies and reparations, of course, are not enough. They will never be enough, but they are all at this time that we as a civilized nation can do.

I will vote against this amendment. I will vote for this legislation, as I hope the majority of my colleagues will. Before we vote on this legislation, though, I want to say something to my friend Wilson. I want to say, "Thank you, Wilson, and I am sorry."

Mr. President, this legislation acknowledges the fundamental injustice of the evacuation, relocation, and internment of American citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry.

It makes restitution to these internees and the the Aleut residents whose personal property was taken or destroyed. These people were denied due process of law, being arrested and held without trial, appeal, or legal counsel. They were subject to unlawful searches and seizure, losing their property and jobs, as well as their freedom. They were denied equal protection under the law, being incarcerated strictly on the basis of their race.

This bill would also establish a civil liberties public education fund to sponsor research and educational activities so that the events surrounding the relocation and internment will be remembered, and the causes and circumstances of this event may be understood. The fund will also support comparative studies of similar civil liberties abuses and the effect of racial prejudice embodied by Government action in times of national stress.

It is fitting, when we are celebrating the bicentennial of our Constitution, that we reflect on those times when rights have been violated. Carl Schurz has said, "Our country, right or wrong. When right, to be kept right; when wrong, to be put right." This is a case where we can put right an old wrong, and I wholeheartedly support this legislation.

Again, I commend my colleague from the State of Hawaii for his tireless, unceasing efforts to have justice restored.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. REID. I yield.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I commend the Senator for his excellent statement and thank him for cosponsorship of the measure, as one of the early cosponsors of the measure.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, if I were to make my judgment, when I vote, on the basis of personal affection for the sponsor of any bill, resolution, or amendment, I would be standing foursquare with the Senator from Hawaii, because there is no Member of the Senate for whom I have greater affection, and he knows that. He has been my friend and I have been his since he came to the Senate.

It gives me a great amount of pain to disagree with him on this issue, because I know it is important to him. It is an emotional issue with him. But I am old enough to remember those days immediately preceding Pearl Harbor, and I remember the emotion of that time, too, when the news came on December 7 about the destruction at Pearl Harbor.

I might add that the emotion ran from coast to coast. As a matter of fact, the only time the Rose Bowl football game has not been played in Pasadena, CA, was in January 1942, when it was played in Durham, NC, because the intelligence community of this Government had reported to President Franklin D. Roosevelt that there were serious risks.

So, like the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER], I regret that part of the legislative proposal before us reflects upon the leaders of our Government at that time.

We all have 20-20 vision on Monday morning. If we had to go over it again, knowing what we know now, there may not have been any internment. I am not sure about that, because a lot of things have been left unsaid by the Commission to which various Senators have alluded that made its findings, which were incorporated into the legislation before us.

There is, for example, a distinguished resident of Hawaii named David Lowman, a former official of the National Security Agency and an acknowledged expert on declassified World War II intelligence material. Mr. Lowman has testified before the House and the Senate on the intelligence background related to the issue now before us. Mr. Lowman also has served as a consultant to the Department of Justice and has testified for that Department in Federal court as an acknowledged expert witness on this issue.

In his statement regarding the relocation, Mr. Lowman stresses that there was a stream of intelligence information being forwarded to President Roosevelt throughout 1941 and 1942. This intelligence warned over and over that Japanese residents on the west coast had been recruited into subversive nets designed to operate in a wartime environment. Mr. Lowman states that "widespread espionage by Japanese residents was reported along with the high possibility of sabotage and fifth column activity."

Let me give an example of some of the intelligence that was in addition to the MAGIC cables during this time—M-A-G-I-C being the initials of the intelligence effort.

An Office of Naval Intelligence [ONI] December 4, 1941, summary of Japanese intelligence in the United States during 1941 concluded that an "intelligence machine geared for war" had been put into operation utilizing both alien and second-generation Japanese.

Before we begin the process of implicitly or explicitly jumping on a former President of the United States who is no longer here to defend himself, Franklin Roosevelt, let us ask ourselves what we would have done if we had been President and received that intelligence information from our own intelligence community.

So I cannot buy this business of kicking our Government around at a time when horrible destruction had occurred at Pearl Harbor, unprovoked, on a day of infamy, as Roosevelt called it before the Congress of the United States. What would we have done? It is all very well on Monday morning to replay the game of Saturday. But the President of the United States in December 1941 and January 1942, and thereafter, had a responsibility to protect this country as best he could based on the information available to him.

This Office of Naval Intelligence report of December 24, Christmas Eve, 1941, stated: "Although handicapped by the detention of many of its key individuals"—and they were referring to the FBI sweep of suspects immediately after Pearl Harbor—"the Japanese Intelligence Network in this hemisphere continues in operation."

What was the President of the United States supposed to do in the face of intelligence information like this? I think he did exactly what any of us would have done had we been sitting at the time in the Oval Office.

Then on February 7, 1942, the Office of Naval Intelligence concluded that the continued presence of Japanese residents on Terminal Island, in the Los Angeles harbor, was a hazard to U.S. security because of continuing espionage and that sabotage was a distinct possibility.

Then there is an ONI investigation conducted on and about January 26, 1942. The investigation concerning actual events on the small Hawaiian Island of Niihau during the Pearl Harbor attack led ONI to report to the President of the United States that Japanese residents previously thought loyal might aid Japan if the opportunity arose.

I do not like that kind of suggestion. But bear in mind Pearl Harbor had happened. Our Navy was in disarray. Countless hundreds of American young men lay dead and the President of the United States was convinced that it was his responsibility to protect this country.

Would we have reacted differently?

A G-2 Army report of January 3, 1942, revealed that:

> A widespread decentralized system of Japanese "clubs," labor organizations, and legitimate business groups has been converted into an important unit of the central Japanese Intelligence Network. There can be no doubt that most of the leaders have been and continue to function as key operatives for the Japanese Government along the West Coast.

And John J. McCloy, a name that is familiar to all of us, was Assistant Secretary of War under Franklin Roosevelt, and as far as I know, he is the only man alive today from the President's inner circle on the evacuation. I presume that nobody will attack John J. McCloy's character or integrity or his truthfulness. Mr. McCloy testified that these intelligence reports were the reason Roosevelt signed the evacuation order.

Mr. Lowman, of whom I referred at the outset of my remarks, a former official of the National Security Agency, has pointed out that the FBI had built cases against Japanese-Americans but the Attorney General ordered them not to proceed against citizens. So it was not a willy-nilly thing. It was done with as much consideration as possible but a judgment was made that is regretted today and certainly, a lot of people had their liberties deprived in the process.

The effort to apprehend, indict, and prosecute what appeared to be hundreds of these cases in the midst of wartime without revealing intelligence sources—at the same time trying to defend the west coast against attack in the face of what was perceived to be ongoing espionage—was beyond reason. It could not be done. It would not be done today under similar circumstances. And it was in this context that the President of the United States ordered the evacuation as the only effective solution available to him under the circumstances.

Now, I hope that we can proceed and I shall discuss various aspects of this later on in consideration of this measure, but I hope we can proceed with a little more care in terms of outright statements, and I will say to the distinguished Senator from Virginia that I appreciate his comments that I heard earlier.

For example, there was one Senator on this floor this morning, and he is a Senator whom I respect, who said that the program allows individuals to apply for reparations if they think they are entitled to them.

On the contrary. As I read the bill, it places an affirmative duty on the Attorney General of the United States to locate all of these people and make payments to them. Now they can turn them down if they want to.

Then, let us not get carried away, Mr. President, about who is supporting this measure and who is not.

Another distinguished Senator, also my friend, said on this floor yesterday that the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion both support the Japanese-American internment bill, the Civil Liberties Act of 1988.

I called the two groups and what do you know? They say they do not have any position on this bill. The VFW spokesman, Kenneth Stedman, who is the director of national security and foreign affairs for the Veterans of Foreign Wars, said "Senator"—blank—"must have mispoke. The VFW has no position on this bill."

And the American Legion spokesman, Phil Riggin, who is the National legislative director, said that the American Legion has no position on this bill and never has.

So I hope that we can proceed on the merits of the legislation or lack thereof and not make any inadvertent claims of support that really are not there.

Now, as I said, Mr. President, I am on my feet simply to make these few comments. Later on, in consideration of the legislation, I will proceed further, and I thank the Chair for recognizing me.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, unfortunately, this Senator has to fulfill a longstanding engagement in the central part of Virginia and must depart.

I say to my good friends from Hawaii, both distinguished Senators from Hawaii, that I commend them for bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate. Indeed, in the early stages, I felt that I could join them. But on closer reflection, as to certain portions of the bill and the expenditure of the money, I find points which I cannot accept.

I will not be here for the remainder of the day, as I would have liked to have been, to express my views in support of certain sections of the bill and opposition to others.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, Senator STEVENS was to be here at this hour. While we are waiting for him, I might say, in response to the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina, that we have a list of veterans' organizations, including those of the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars, which we distributed yesterday.

I would like to read the list of veterans' groups which have endorsed by resolution the bill now pending. They are: the 34th Infantry Division Association of Chicago; 34th Infantry Division Association of Minneapolis—and, or course, the 100th Infantry Battalion, 442d Regimental Combat Team, was part of the 34th Infantry Division—503 Parachute RCT Assocation; American Legion, Chicago Nisei Post 1183; American Legion, 6th District Council, Department of Illinois; American Legion, 66th National Convention.

Now, if the Senator from North Carolina will take note, this American Legion, 66th National Convention, adopted a resolution endorsing the bill now pending.

The Jewish War Veterans of the USA: Veterans of Foreign Wars; Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Committee, Department of California, 64th Annual Convention; Veterans of Foreign Wars, Department of California; Veterans of Foreign Wars, USA, 85th National Convention; and Veterans of Foreign Wars, Department of North Dakota.

These veterans' organizations have actually adopted resolutions endorsing the bill now pending, so I would like to keep the RECORD straight in that regard.

Mr. President, does the Senator from Nevada seek the floor?

Mr. HECHT. Yes. In consideration of our fellow Senators who are on a time schedule and have to leave, I would be happy to wrap up within 1 minute or 2 minutes and vote on this.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, it has been brought out that many acts of racism were part of the relocation. I can only say that every answer to an act of racism is not to award money, whether it is true or not.

But let us bring us to the crux of my amendment. Let us get everything back into perspective. We apologize. Hindsight has proven us wrong. Forty-five years later we accept the recommendations of the Commission, but we will not pay the $1.3 billion or whatever that figure might be.

We are talking about money, the American taxpayers' money. I do not believe $1.3 billion 45 years later is justified.

That, my fellow colleagues, plain and simple, is my amendment.

I say to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii that I am prepared to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, could I address a question to the Senator from Hawaii? Is my understanding that the purpose for which the Senator from Alaska was to come over was to make a motion to table the pending amendment? Is that correct?

Mr. MATSUNAGA. That is correct.

Mr. WARNER. To expedite the matter, is it not possible that someone else could make that motion?

Mr. MATSUNAGA. We expect him in just a few minutes. In the meantime, we will have a quorum call.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am prepared now to make a motion to table the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, unless there is someone else who would like to speak before that motion is made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is in order.

Mr. STEVENS. I just wanted to make sure. I thought there was one other Senator that indicated he wanted to speak.

If there is no other Senator who wishes to speak on the Hecht amendment, Mr. President, I move to table the amendment of the Senator from Nevada and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this will be a 15-minute rollcall vote. I urge that Senators make preparations to come to the floor and vote. I am going to suggest the absence of a quorum. Its only purpose will be to give the Cloakrooms another brief 2 or 3 minutes and Senators' staffs listening in their offices time to alert Senators to come to the floor and vote.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There being no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alaska to table the amendment of the Senator from Nevada. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] is absent because of illness.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 67, nays 30, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 1919 was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I fully support the underlying goals of this legislation. As I see them, the bill's goals are to acknowledge the grave mistake and injustice that took place when 120,000 individuals of Japanese ancestry were relocated and interned during World War II.

The further objective is to heal for good the wounds resulting from that policy.

I do not support, however, the bill's method of achieving its goals. In my view, the proper way for the U.S. Government to respond to the indignities suffered by the Japanese-Americans who were relocated and interned is to acknowledge the mistake and make an unequivocal, official apology. Payment of the arbitrary sum of $20,000 to every surviving internee, over four decades after the fact, seems to me an inappropriate and imprudent answer to the problem.

Let me explain why I have reached this conclusion.

There is no denying that the relocation and internment of Americans of Japanese descent was a ghastly error. It was a mistaken decision resulting from the suspicion and hysteria of wartime. Thousands of loyal American citizens were uprooted from their homes, jobs, schools and businesses, and placed in the internment camps without good reason. They spent the war years behind barbed wire, forced to endure the bleakness of the camps and the ignominy of official suspicion.

Although it is hard today to comprehend fully the wartime mentality that made the internment program possible, it is easy now to see what a mistake it was. The wartime relocation and internment of Japanese-American civilians is a sad chapter in the history of civil rights in the United States. I wholeheartedly believe that the victims—and they certainly were victims—deserve a sincere apology from the U.S. Government.

If a payment were to be made, what is the proper payment? If perfect records were kept, we could go back and determine exactly what each individual who was interned lost in terms of property and income. Undoubtedly, we would learn that some of those sent to the camps sacrificed homes, cars and businesses worth $20,000 and more. I am fully certain we would learn that many of the children interned lost less than $20,000, yet under this legislation everyone receives exactly the same amount.

Unfortunately, such an accounting is not possible. There are no such perfect or reliable records of who lost what. The relocations and internments took place many years ago, and they were carried out quickly. There is no clear documentation of who lost what, no evidence that the $20,000 per person authorized in this bill is even close to accurate.

The logical question, then, is: How did those who wrote this legislation arrive at the figure of $20,000 per person? This is an important question because it is clear from the language of this legislation, and from the accompanying committee report, that the authorized funds are intended as compensation for economic loss. The payment of $20,000 per person is not presented as a symbol but, rather, as economic redress. In this connection, it is significant to note that the 1948 Japanese American Evacuation Claims Act awarded $38 million in claims. The supporters of this bill believe that those awards were inadequate. In any event, if the payment of money were merely symbolic, a second round of payments would not be necessary at this point.

So it is not the symbolism apparently that is being sought, it is redress, economic redress.

How was the $20,000 figure calculated? To answer that question, I would like to discuss testimony given by an individual from the firm that was responsible for the calculations used by the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians when the figure of $20,000 per person was arrived at. Michael C. Barth of a company called ICF, Inc., testified on April 28, 1986, before the Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations of the House Committee on the Judiciary.

A story in the March 30, 1988, Washington Post reports that ICF Consulting is a Washington company that had $3 million in revenue last year and has 25 employees. The story continues, "It is a subsidiary of American Capital and Research Corp., a holding company based in Fairfax County that also owns firms involved in health care consulting, energy and environmental issues, venture capital, computer services, and defense contracting."

In its 1983 report estimating the economic losses suffered by internees, the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians stated that estimates were "performed between February and May 1983 by ICF Inc." Thus, the $20,000 payments authorized in this bill are based on a 4-month study by ICF.

What qualifies this relatively small company to determine, on the basis of a 4-month study, the figure that has resulted in this $1.3 billion authorization? Mr. President, I do not know. I have no information indicating that the special congressional commission on wartime relocation, the GAO, any other accounting or consulting firm, the relevant committees, or anyone else has checked the calculations of ICF to determine their validity. These calculations have been accepted wholesale, even though they are far from precise.

To illustrate my point, I refer to Mr. Barth's testimony. In it, he explains what was the basis for the $20,000 figure contained in this bill. He states that "income losses were defined to be the amount of income that might have been earned by excludees had they not been in the detention camps." He goes on to say that after ICF arrived at a range for lost income and adjusted for inflation, it "further adjusted that for illustrative purposes because it's possible that had this money been available to the detainees they might have been able to invest it as other citizens might have."

Listen to all the "mights" in the statement—"might the internees been able to invest it as other citizens might have."

He continues that property losses were determined and included in the total based on "various analyses of the amounts of claims that might have been claimed had people not been ignorant or unaware or otherwise unable to make claims for which they could not provide adequate justification."

This is a mysterious procedure.

As the qualified language of these excerpts indicates, there were many mathematical assumptions made, and a great deal of vagueness, in the process that brought this large $1.3 billion appropriation to the Senate floor. Is this the proper way to make a legislative decision of such magnitude?

Now let us look for a moment at the nature of the legislative decision we are making. If we pass S. 1009, the Senate will be saying, in effect: The way to right this wrong is to pay large sums of money to the victims. We are buying an apology at the price of $20,000 per person. Is there a precedent for such an extraordinary action by this Government? If not, what kind of precedent will we set by passing this bill? While the relocation and internment of Japanese-Americans was a terrible error by the U.S. Government—no one disputes that now—it is not the only error the Government has made. Japanese-Americans are not the only group that has been unjustly wronged.

For example, what will passage of this measure say to the American Indians whose ancestors were brutally removed from their lands? Surely argument can be made that the reservations on which so many Indians were placed, and continue to live today, and the Federal programs in place to assist American Indians, have not sufficiently redressed the wrongs committed against them. Should we calculate a rough monetary figure for the value of the property American Indians might own today if they had not been displaced, and add to it the income they might have earned over the years if they had been able to work that land?

And what about the value of the land that they were forced from? Would they be able to keep that land under the redress that we have made pursuant to this legislation and the precedent it sets?6

We discussed the situation about the American Indians. What are we going to redress and who do we redress about the unfairness that has occurred with them? How are we ever going to calculate that, and should they not receive $20,000 apiece? What about black Americans? Think of those, how about those, their families, their predecessors who were in slavery in this Nation, not temporarily but permanently in slavery? How are we going to make a redress to them and their descendants? It is not just those of many years gone by of the black population of this country. They suffered the most outrageous discrimination in this Nation right up to the midsixties when some of the civil rights laws were passed. Are we going to make some kind of a redress to them?

It seems to me if we are, we are going to have to consider the implications on the Federal deficit and the Federal expenditures if that is going to occur. But is not their case a legitimate one?

My point here is that the Federal Government has indeed acted unfairly, unfairly in many instances. And the proper way to make redress is not monetarily, not just to ship out indiscriminately $20,000 checks, but to recognize it and try to cure the indignities, the unfairness, and to offer an official apology, which we are prepared to do and which we should do.

I would urge Senators to consider more generally the question of priorities. There is no doubt that any program to repay former internees for lost property and income will involve a large sum of money. Whether it is $1.3 billion or $1.5 billion, who knows? But certainly the sum is large.

Even to those of us who deal with budgets here constantly in large figures, the sum of over $1 billion is significant, significant to our taxpayers, significant to our Nation, signficiant to our national debt.

The question is, should the United States Government pay such a sum to internees now in 1988, 40 years after the event, with all the other needs that this Nation has and with the Federal budget in such deplorable shape?

I believe it is wrong to take this step which is why I will vote against this bill. My intention in doing so is not just to cut the funding for the redress bill but also to make a point about our national priorities.

Compare this spending, this huge sum of redress of a 40-year-old wrong, to spending the same sum on maternal and child health care, an area where $1.3 billion will make this a better country, not just today, but for the future. For that matter, consider the numerous other needs to which this money could be applied. The war on drugs which we continue to lose could certainly use a monetary injection of this size. How about the rehabilitation of those poor souls who have been hooked on drugs and who we are trying to come back?

I believe that most Americans if given the choice would choose to earmark this $1.3 billion for increased enforcement of drug laws or treatment of drug addicts and those who seek rehabiliation. It is pathetic the number of drug addicts who seek to be cured, but there is nothing there for them.

As another example, with this money we could also choose to make a new attack on homelessness, which continues in our cities at an alarming rate, despite all the publicity and the good intentions of city, State, and Federal programs.

Assuming that we all agree that it would be a good idea to pay former internees of Japanese descent—and I do not agree—the question remains: Do we have the money for such a program? I think that, in light of our other priorities, we do not. If we are to spend such a huge sum of money, I think it should be to address a real need in this country. It all comes down to a question of priorities, and I do not believe that this is the priority that demands the expenditure of $1.3 billion.

I urge Senators, as they consider S. 1009, to ask themselves what is the best way to right the grievous wrong that was done. We acknowledge that.

I was a young man at the time. I can remember when that took place, although I did not live on the west coast. I lived on the east coast. It was wrong. Imagine: Seizing these people, loyal Japanese-Americans, from the west coast, transporting them inland because of fear that there would be some communication with Japanese vessels, at the same time when there was a far larger Japanese-American population, recognizing that they posed no threat at all to the United States. Hawaii was 2,000 miles closer to Japan. There was no such internment program, and there should not have been.

So, Mr. President, I believe that a sincere, unequivocal apology by the U.S. Government will not only say what must be said but also will say it properly. Therefore, I do hope that this legislation will not be approved.

ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished Republican leader is on the floor and we do want to move forward with the conference report.

Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5) to improve elementary and secondary education, and for other purposes.

(The amendment of the House is printed in the RECORD of April 19, 1988, beginning at page 7355.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am very pleased that we are considering H.R. 5, the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988.

It is fitting tribute that this legislation is named after both AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS, the chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, and Senator STAFFORD, the former chairman and current ranking minority member of the Senate Subcommittee on Education. It is proof that the Federal investment in elementary and secondary education enjoys solid bipartisan support.

In addition, I am extremely pleased that as part of this legislation we have renamed the GSL Program the Robert T. Stafford Student Loan Program. When we passed the elementary and secondary reauthorization bill on the Senate floor in December, I lamented the fact that our good friend of education would be retiring at the end of this Congress, thus ending the education firm of Pell-Stafford. By naming the principle student loan program after Senator STAFFORD, we have guaranteed that the firm of Stafford and Pell will live on long after we have both retired from this Chamber through both the Pell Grant Program and the Stafford Student Loan Program.

The legislation before us represents strong consensus on both sides of the Capitol, as well as both sides of the aisle. In reaching that consensus, there has been give—and take—on both sides. The final result is a strong bill supporting our twin commitments to equality and quality through Federal financial assistance. We have a solid reauthorization of the critically important chapter 1 program, and a new concentration grant formula that I hope will ensure that, for the first time since 1981, needed funds will be flowing to areas with high concentrations of chapter 1 children. In addition, we have restructured the chapter 2 block grant so that it can more effectively contribute to educational innovation and reform at the local level.

We have agreed to the Senate's restructuring of the Impact Aid Program, and to major elements of the Senate's changes in the Bilingual Education Act. We have more than doubled the authorization for the Magnet School Program which provides assistance to school districts under a desegregation plan, and have created a new program which will provide grants to racially isolated schools to improve curriculum quality.

We have an important new program to aid the gifted and talented, as well as an expanded Adult Education Act. We continue the Dropout Prevention Program that was authorized last year, and we begin a new and extremely important program of basic skills for secondary school students.

On a more personal note, we have preserved provisions on which I have worked for many years. These include a 10-percent setaside for corrections education under the Adult Education Act, and creation of an optional test for academic excellence.

These are but a few of the more important changes that we have accomplished in fashioning this omnibus legislation. It is legislation of which we can all be proud, and which should most certainly be sent to the President for his signature.

I would like to emphasize that the statement of managers that was part of the conference report would continue to apply to H.R. 5 as part of the legislative history. I would therefore ask that the full text of the statement of managers on the conference report on H.R. 5, as it applies to the education provisions, be inserted in the RECORD with the clear understanding that it would serve as legislative background.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5) to improve elementary and secondary education, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS

TITLE I

CHAPTER 1

1. The House bill titles the act the "School Improvement Act of 1987" while the Senate amendment titles it the "Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary Education Improvement Act of 1987".

The House recedes with an amendment naming the Act "The Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988", and renaming the guaranteed student loan program the "Robert T. Stafford Student Loan Program".

2. The House bill declares it to be the policy to increase the amount appropriated for Chapter 1 by $500,000,000 a year over the next six years while the Senate amendment proposes increasing the percentage of children served over the next five years until all eligible children are served.

The Senate recedes with an amendment revising this provision to read: "expand the program authorized by this chapter over the next 5 years by increasing funding for this chapter by at least $500,000,000 over baseline each fiscal year and thereby increasing the percentage of eligible children served in each fiscal year with the intent of serving all eligible children by fiscal year 1993."

3. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, provides that AFDC children above the poverty line shall be counted for purposes of distribution of funds for fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991 only.

The Senate recedes.

4. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, limits determination of children to be counted under AFDC above the poverty line to fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991, similar to item 3.

The Senate recedes.

5. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, states the criteria of poverty and the form of criteria to be used in counting AFDC children, and neglected and delinquent children.

The Senate recedes.

6. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, inserts the phrase "or operated with Federal assistance," regarding schools for Indian children.

The House recedes with an amendment to read as follows: "secondary schools for Indian children operated with Federal assistance or operated by the Department of Interior."

7. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, designates certain tribal organizations as local educational agencies and the Secretary of the Interior as a State educational agency for purposes of this chapter, and requires the Secretary to comply with certain U.S. codes if he issues regulations.

The House recedes.

8. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, provides for a small state minimum of ¼ of 1 percent from Chapter 1 basic grant funds once appropriations exceed a certain level, and limits the amount of increase any state may receive under this provision to 150% of the amount received for the preceding fiscal year.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that no State may receive more than 150% of the national average per pupil allocation or more than 150% of the amount it received under this part in the previous fiscal year, whichever is less, due to this provision and that the small State minimum may take effect when appropriations for Part A exceed by at least $700,000,000 the amount appropriated in fiscal year 1988.

9. The House bill reauthorizes the program beginning October 1, 1987, while the Senate amendment reauthorizes it beginning October 1, 1988.

The House recedes.

10. Concentration Grants:

a. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, distributes one half of the amount available for concentration grants based on each county's number of Chapter 1 children in excess of 5,000 or 20%, except that each State receives at least one-quarter of one percent of $250,000 whichever is greater (see note (c), page 20, for second half of the distribution under the Senate amendment).

The Senate recedes.

b. The House bill distributes all its concentration grant funds using one formula: children counted under section 1005(c) in counties in excess of 6500 and all such children in counties in excess of 15%. The House bill also includes a State minimum of one-quarter of one percent.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that each State shall receive 150% of the national average per pupil allocation under this section or a minimum of $250,000.

c. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, distributes the second half of funds available under concentration grants on the basis of the regular Chapter 1 formula, and provides for a second small state minimum of ¼ of one percent or $250,000 whichever is greater, from the second half of funds available under concentration grants.

The Senate recedes.

d. The House bill states that the Secretary shall determine the number of children to be counted for any county while the Senate amendment designates the SEA to perform that function.

The House recedes with an amendment giving the Secretary the responsibility to allocate to the county level and giving the State educational agency the responsibility to allocate within counties.

e. The House bill sets special rules for distribution of concentration funds to States which receive the minimum grant while the Senate amendment sets such rules for States receiving less than 1 percent of the total available for concentration grants.

The Senate recedes.

f. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires that in distributing concentration funds, LEAs under the first two rankings must have received an amount per eligible child equal to that distributed under the regular Chapter 1 formula before funds may be distributed to LEAs in rank order.

The Senate recedes.

g. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, restricts the number of LEAs which can receive concentration grants under the rank ordering method to no more than the number who would be eligible under the county-wide poverty average distribution methods.

The Senate recedes.

h. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, allows the States to reserve 2 percent of the concentration moneys to distribute to LEAs which meet the 6500 or 15% requirement but are otherwise ineligible for concentration funds.

The Senate recedes.

i. The House bill reserves the first $400 million above the 1987 appropriations level for concentration grants while the Senate amendment reserves the first $400,000,000 above a $4.3 billion appropriations level for such purposes and provides that when amounts appropriated for Chapter 1 exceed $4.7 billion, 10 percent of such amount shall be reserved for concentration grants.

j. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, exempts funds for Senate part B (Secondary Schools programs) from calculations of the $4.3 and $4.7 billion appropriations levels.

The House recedes with an amendment reserving $400 million for such grants whenever the appropriation for Part A exceeds $3.9 billion and further reserving 10% of appropriations for Part A for this purpose when such appropriations exceed $4.3 billion, except that no State may receive less than it received in the previous fiscal year for the basic grant.

k. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, provides that if amounts are not available to fully fund concentration grants, such grants shall be ratably reduced, and ratably increased if additional amounts are made available in such a year.

The House recedes.

11. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, specifies "State and local" educational agencies.

The House recedes.

12. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, requires a local education agency to match the 5% of Chapter 1 money it may use for innovation.

The House recedes.

13. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, provides for a waiver of the 50 percent matching requirement for innovation projects under certain circumstances.

The House recedes.

14. Local Applications.

The House recedes with an amendment requiring a description of the assessment procedure in the local educational agency application. The conferees intend that the term "describe" shall not be interpreted to mean the submission of extended narrative prose resulting in unnecessary and burdensome paperwork for local educational agencies and State educational agencies. State educational agencies are encouraged to work with representatives of their local educational agencies to develop standard application forms which will reflect the information required in the most concise form possible.

a. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, modifies "more advanced skills" with the phrase "that all children should master".

The House recedes with an amendment requiring programs to offer instruction so that children will learn advanced skills all children are expected to master.

The conferees intend that the phrase "advanced skills that all children are expected to master" shall mean academic expectations not substantially different from those expected for other students of the same age or at the same grade level.

b. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, references "consultation with teachers and parents" in development of the application.

The House recedes.

c. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes an assurance regarding coordination of services to students served by more than one special program.

The House recedes.

d. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires that the application contain a description of services including procedures for needs assessment, evaluation, and identifying and modifying programs for schools and students.

The Senate recedes with an amendment deleting repetitive language pertaining to evaluation and moving procedural language to other sections of the chapter.

The conferees intend that local educational agencies may use current Chapter 1 assessment procedures for children who, with or without bilingual assistance in the testing process, can be identified, using testing written in the English language, as educationally deprived children in greatest need of assistance. For children whose lack of English language proficiency precludes valid assessment using such testing, local procedures to screen and select educationally deprived LEP children may be used, e.g. teacher evaluation, language dominance testing, weighting factors, or other indicators of educational deprivation which discriminate on a basis other than just language deficiency.

15. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, adds the phrase "for compensatory educational services".

The Senate recedes.

16. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, requires the plan to reference implementation of the effective schools program.

The Senate recedes with an amendment requiring this coordination, if appropriate.

17. The House bill contains a referencing error, incorrectly referencing section (d) rather than section (e) on accountability.

The House recedes.

18. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, states that funds for schoolwide projects may be used to plan and implement effective schools programs.

The Senate recedes.

19. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, adds paragraphs regarding parental opportunities to participate in the design, operation and evaluation of the Chapter 1 program with special emphasis on parents who lack literacy or English-speaking skills.

The House recedes.

20. The House bill authorizes $30,000,000 for fiscal year 1988 for capital expenses to help school districts ensure that eligible children enrolled in private schools have equal access to Chapter 1 programs while the Senate amendment authorizes $50,000,000 for fiscal year 1989 for such purpose. Both bills authorize "such sums" for later years.

The House recedes with an amendment authorizing $30 million for fiscal year 1988 and $40 million for fiscal 1989 and "such sums" through 1993.

21. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, specifies what may be considered personal property in this new program.

The Senate recedes.

22. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, uses the term "regular" with regard to non-federal funds in the non-supplanting prohibition.

The Senate recedes.

23. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, contains a section requiring local educational agencies to use special State or local program funds in the aggregate in Chapter 1 eligible schools to the extent they would have without Chapter 1 funds being available prior to using Chapter 1 funds in such schools. (See note 24, page 60, for special implementation time table.)

The Senate recedes.

24. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, delays the applicability of the special supplement—not supplant provision described in note 23 for 2 years in states which currently have special programs which operate under current ECIA supplement—not supplant provisions.

The Senate recedes.

25. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, requires the State to withhold funds from LEAs which are not in compliance with comparability requirements, but only to the extent they are out of compliance.

The Senate recedes.

26. The House bill applies the exclusion of special state and local funds to both comparability and supplement/supplant requirements while the Senate amendment makes it applicable only to comparability.

The Senate recedes.

27. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, mentions "children with specific learning disabilities" in addition to handicapped children.

The House recedes.

28. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, adds "and related services" to special education as excludable costs for supplement, not supplant, purposes.

The Senate recedes.

Section 1019. Evaluations. The conferees intend that national evaluation standards shall be implemented as quickly as possible by State and local educational agencies, and that such agencies which are already using the Title I evaluation and reporting system as their formal evaluation tool or a system which allows national aggregation of data according to such standards shall consider the 1988-1989 school year as the first year of implementation of evaluation requirements pursuant to this section.

The conferees further intend that States which are currently conducting State evaluations on a three-year cycle where one-third of the local educational agencies report each year may continue to use that evaluation procedure.

In addition, conferees intend that local educational agencies may use a sampling procedure or carefully designed study to meet the sustained gains requirement rather than trying to track all children served at all grade levels in all subject areas for a period of three years. The conferees recognize that sampling and study procedures are cost and time efficient while still providing the local educational agency with necessary and valuable information about the effectiveness of their programs.

29. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires LEAs to evaluate annually the effectiveness of parental involvement.

The House recedes with amendment changing "evaluate" to "assess".

The House recedes with an amendment regarding data collection. "(3) collect data on the number of children with handicapping conditions, the race, age, and gender of children . . .". The conferees intend that the report shall simply state the total number of children with handicapping conditions who are served in the Chapter 1 program, not the number broken out by grade level, race, age, gender, and subject area or by handicapping condition in each of those categories.

30. State Application. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires States to submit an application to the Secretary of Education in order to receive funds under this chapter.

The Senate recedes with an amendment requiring the State to develop, in consultation with a committee of practitioners, a program improvement plan which shall be disseminated to school districts and available at the State level for inspection.

a. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires that the State application describe the criteria and procedures the State will use to assess educational effectiveness of local and State programs.

The Senate recedes.

b. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires that the State application describe the criteria, policy and procedures it will use to take corrective measures to improve LEAs with inadequate educational achievement.

The Senate recedes.

c. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires that the State demonstrates that the measures it proposes to use are valid and reliable.

The Senate recedes.

d. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, allows the Secretary to require specific data collection and uniform evaluation procedures to allow information to be aggregated and compared among states.

The Senate recedes.

e. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires the State to explain in its application any differences in the criteria used by the State and by any local education agency for assessing program effectiveness.

The Senate recedes.

31. The House bill uses the term "no" improvement while the Senate amendment uses the term "inadequate" improvement to decribe the condition which activates LEA program improvement efforts.

The House recedes with amendments tying the measurement of program effectiveness to the desired outcomes stated in the local educational agency's application and adding "lack of substantial progress" toward meeting outcomes as a trigger for program improvement plans.

The conferees intend that the concept of "improvement" shall mean improvement beyond what a student of a particular age or grade level who is receiving services funded under this part would be expected to make during the period being measured if the child received no additional help. This interpretation embodies the congressional purpose that providing Chapter 1 services, in addition to regular education services provided by the local educational agency, to children served by programs under this part who are achieving below the level that is appropriate for children of their age, should result in such students' progression at a faster rate than students who receive no extra help. Use of the term "improvement" rather than "achievement" is a purposeful substitution to indicate congressional intent that measures and standards used to demonstrate progress toward desired outcomes maybe something other than nationally normed standardized test scores.

32. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, states that a school improvement plan must include a description of educational strategies and resources.

The House recedes.

The conferees intend that State and local educational agencies shall have adequate time to plan carefully and thoughtfully for program improvement, that a "time certain" by which program improvement plans must be in place will be established through the review/modified negotiated rulemaking process, and that State and local educational agencies may set parameters within that time frame. The conferees further intend that State and local educational agencies shall have no more than, but at least, one full school year during which the plan is in effect before judging its effectiveness in raising aggregate student performance.

33. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires that the SEA take appropriate corrective action against LEAs which fail to carry out program requirements, including failure to provide effective compensatory education services.

The House recedes with an amendment changing the title of the section to "Further Action", outlining the joint steps that State and local educational agencies shall take to ensure that program improvement efforts are successful, and adding a new section (f) requiring mutual approval of program improvement plans prior to their implementation.

The conferees intend that there shall be continued State oversight until the school building Chapter 1 program improves. The conferees emphasize that they intend the State role to be one of facilitating local efforts in whatever manner is cooperatively agreed will be most effective in implementing effective local services to eligible children. Such facilitation may be through direct assistance by State staff or through helping local educational agencies obtain technical assistance from other sources.

The conferees further intend that a school building which is implementing a program improvement plan shall, each year until performance improves, use the same measurement instrument and standards to determine whether performance has improved that it used to measure performance in the year that lack of substantial progress, no improvement or a decline in performance was first demonstrated pursuant to the requirements of this chapter. An exception to this procedure would be made if the measurement instrument or process itself was found to be the problem.

34. a. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, contains a section requiring the SEA to have and implement an educational improvement plan in any year it receives additional state administrative money under section 1404(b) for such purposes.

The House recedes with an amendment moving the State plan requirement to section 1020 and removing the requirement that it be submitted to the Secretary.

b. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires the State to develop an educational improvement plan, in consultation with LEAs, which plan includes objective measures and assessment standards or procedures for developing them.

The House recedes with an amendment moving the requirement to section 1020.

c. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires the improvement plan to describe the way in which the States will determine which schools are most in need of improvement and how it will assist them.

The House recedes with an amendment removing the reference to schools in greatest need of assistance and adding a requirement that timelines for implementation of program improvement plans be decided by the State and local educational agencies.

d. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires the State to describe the technical assistance it will offer to schools in need of improvement.

The Senate recedes.

e. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires the State to describe how it will develop joint plans with LEAs for schools in need of improvement.

The House recedes with an amendment removing the reference to schools in greatest need of assistance and moving the requirement to section 1020.

f. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires the State to provide program improvement assistance to LEAs with schools in greatest need of improvement in the second fiscal year and thereafter that the SEA receives additional state administrative money under section 1404(b).

The House recedes with an amendment removing the reference to schools in greatest need of assistance and moving the requirement to section 1020.

EVEN START

35. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, contains the Even Start program as part B of Chapter 1. The Senate amendment contains Even Start in part A of Title II.

The Senate recedes.

a. The Senate amendment separates the drop-out and basic skills demonstration programs making line-by-line comparisons with the House bill very difficult. Appropriate portions of Title VIII, however, have been moved to this section for comparison purposes and are labeled. The entire text of Title VIII has then been included, following the House bill, as Part B on dropout prevention and basic skills improvement.

HANDICAPPED PROGRAM

The conferees agree that infants and toddlers with handicaps shall receive early intervention services consistent with the requirements and conditions of Part H of the EHA, and therefore, the phrase "who by reason of their handicapping condition require special education and related services" in the definition of handicapped children does not apply to infants and toddlers with handicaps.

The House recedes with an amendment which clarifies for which programs and children these funds can be expended.

43. The House bill and the Senate amendment include assurances regarding compliance with EHA and monitoring such compliance in the State handicapped program, but the House bill states such requirements in assurances (1) and (2) in less detail than the Senate amendment which states such requirements as assurances (2) and (3).

The conferees direct the General Accounting Office, as part of the Study of State Operated Programs, to collect information from a sample of States on the types of residences in which participating children are found. Suggested categories for classifying types of residences include, but need not be limited to: children living in a family home attending educational programs housed in a residential facility; children living in a residential facility (not a single family home) attending an educational program in a regular school administered by an LEA; children living in a residential facility and attending an educational program in that facility and children living in a family home attending an educational program in a regular school administered by an LEA. Using the same sample, the conferees also direct GAO to collect information on where children, participating in Chapter 1 programs for children with handicaps, reside. Such information shall include the following: the number of children living in their own home; the number of children living in foster homes; the number of children living in public facilities housing: (a) 1 to 5 children, (b) 6 to 15 children, and (c) 16 or more children; the number of children living in private facilities housing: (a) 1 to 5 children, (b) 6 to 15 children, (c) 16 or more children.

49. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, requires the SEA to establish policies and procedures for transferring children from State operated programs to LEA programs.

The House recedes.

The conferees anticipate that in the future Chapter 1 handicapped program funds will be used to an increasing degree to foster new and expanded opportunities for children with handicaps to participate with their nonhandicapped peers in a wide variety of educational settings and experiences, thus reinforcing the least restrictive environment provision in Part B of the Education of the Handicapped Act.

Moreover, the conferees intend that nothing in this provision be construed as altering the eligibility status of any agency or program now participating in the Chapter 1 Handicapped Program.

The conferees intend that the development of Federal regulations for Chapter 1 should be a three-step process. The Department of Education will hold, first, a series of regional meetings to identify regulatory issues of concern to school administrators, teachers, parents, scholars and Chapter 1 advocates; second, a modified negotiated rulemaking demonstrate on several key issues; and third, the normal Federal regulatory review and comment process. The goal of steps one and two is to help the regulation writers understand how new activities are likely to impact persons at the implementation level and to help Chapter 1 administrators, teachers, parents and advocates understand how the Department of Education interprets the law.

The modified negotiated rulemaking process is meant to be a demonstration, and thus to be more flexible than the process as operated by other Federal agencies. Specifically, the provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act are waived to shorten the time and procedures necessary to begin the demonstration. The conferees will look with interest at the regulatory process to see if discussions of program regulations among educators, parents, advocates and Department of Education staff will produce regulations that are more clearly understood and widely supported by practioners than some prior regulations.

The conferees stress, however, that this demonstration is not meant to lengthen the time for issuance of regulations. Final regulations for this program should be issued within 240 days after enactment.

86. The House bill limits carry-over funds to 25% of the amount appropriated for FY 88 and 15% for FY 89 and each subsequent year, while the Senate amendment makes such limits applicable first in FY 89 and then FY 90.

Written requests which conform to the requirements of Section 453(b)(2)(B) and (b)(4) of such Act shall qualify as a mitigating circumstance in an enforcement action initiated under Part E, Sec. 453 of such Act.

The conferees further intend that this provision shall encourage, not inhibit, the provision of guidance from the Department of Education to State and local educational agencies.

89. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, includes a section on Federal research and innovation which requires the Secretary to give priority to research on tutoring programs for children eligible under this chapter to be carried out by States in institutions of higher education and to do research on problems of rural school districts. The Senate amendment contains a separate rural education initiative under Title III of its amendment.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to include the study as part of the Chapter 1 longitudinal study.

90. The House bill authorizes $12 million for technical assistance and the National Longitudinal Study for FY 88 and such sums thereafter, while the Senate amendment authorizes $8 million for evaluation and technical assistance for FY 89 and an additional $400,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

2. a. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, includes as stated purposes of the Chapter 2 Program: (a) provides initial funding to enable States and LEAs to implement programs; (b) provides a continuing source of innovation, educational improvement, and support for library and instructional materials; and (c) enhances the quality of teaching and learning through initiating and expanding effective schools programs. b. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, rewrites the purpose of the Chapter 2 Program to focus on six priorities: (1) at risk youth; (2) basic skills for secondary students; (3) gifted and talented education; (4) library resources; (5) school reform—innovation and personnel training; and (6) personal excellence.

The Senate recedes with a general description of the new uses of funds.

3. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, describes State and local responsibility under a new paragraph (b), while the House bill incorporates these purposes in paragraphs (3) and (4) of section 1501.

4. The House bill contains a definition of "at risk and high cost children" while the Senate amendment describes at risk children in the General Statement of Purpose beginning on page 215.

The House recedes.

5. The House bill authorizes appropriations for the Chapter 2 Program at $580 million for FY 1988 and such sums through 1993. The Senate amendment authorizes appropriations at $580 million for FY 1989, $610 million for FY 1990, $640 million for FY 1991, $672 million for FY 1992, and $706 million for FY 1993.

The House recedes.

11. Regarding the distribution of funds to local educational agencies:

a. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, also includes "children living in economically depressed urban and rural areas" when referring to children whose education imposes a higher than average cost per child.

The House recedes with an amendment modifying the Senate's second criterion to "areas of high concentrations of low-income families".

b. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, makes clear that these provisions shall not diminish the responsibility of the LEA's to maintain contact with private schools for advisory purposes.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate recedes.

13. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, amends the high cost provision to require that funds are distributed in proportion to need, i.e., high cost students receive the higher allocations.

The Senate recedes with an amendment making the alternative allocation method permissive with the local educational agency.

The conferees intend that this section or the Chapter 2 program have no effect whatsoever on the distribution of funds among school districts within the States. Rather, that distribution will continue to be guided by other provisions of this chapter. The intent of this section is to provide school districts with an alternative method of allocating funds generated by "high cost children" among schools within the school district. Again, the conferees have no intention of limiting school districts from allocating funds generated by "high cost children" in the same manner as is currently the practice, that is, by averaging the total allocation over all participating public and private schools. This section merely provides an alternative, at school district discretion, to current practice which continues to be allowed under this chapter.

The alternative described in subsection (2)(A) would allow districts, at their discretion, to distribute that portion of their Chapter 2 funds generated by "high cost children" to public and private schools in the district in proportion to the number of "high cost children" in each participating school. Subsection (2)(B) clarifies that regardless of which method of distribution a district chooses for its funds generated by "high cost children", the district must apply that method consistently across all public and private schools for that year of funding.

Finally, subsection (2)(C) makes clear that it is the intention of the conferees that nothing in this section should be construed so as to limit how a school chooses to use its funds within those allowable uses of funds established by this chapter between schools.

The Senate recedes requiring the State to describe its use of funds for effective schools.

20. The House bill provides for an annual evaluation of the effectiveness of the Chapter 2 program. The Senate amendment provides for an evaluation of the effectiveness of Chapter 2 programs in FY 1992.

The House recedes with an amendment to require annual submission of data on use of funds, types of services provided, and students served.

It is highly desirable that at the State and national levels, the State educational agencies and the U.S. Department of Education cooperatively develop guidelines for reporting Chapter 2 programs' effectiveness on an annual basis in order to provide more uniform accountability to Congress in the use of, and the results of, Chapter 2 expenditures. Some of the information in the report will include: (1) expenditures in each area of targeting funding; (2) results from high cost factor distribution; and (3) effective schools implementation, results and progress.

The House recedes.

31. The House bill places a caveat subject to the limitations of the Chapter, while the Senate amendment uses the phrase provisions. The Senate amendment includes the phrase how funds the agency receives while the House bill uses the phrase funds under this subpart.

The House recedes.

38. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, specifies that improvement activities may include the development of model curricula; the provision of grants to schools or teachers for innovative instructional approaches, the purchase of library books, reference materials, and instructional aids; and testing programs which lead to better academic achievement.

39. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, also includes the improvement of recruitment and training of individuals working with preschool children in education programs, in terms of personnel enhancement.

The Senate recedes with an amendment which describes the new uses of funds.

New uses of funds are as follows:

Programs to meet the educational needs of students at risk of school failure and dropping out and students for whom providing an education entails higher than average costs; programs for the acquisition and use of instructional and educational materials, including—library books, reference materials, computer software and hardware for instructional use, and other curricular materials that would be used to improve the quality of instruction; innovative programs designed to carry out schoolwide improvements, including effective schools program; programs of training and professional development to enhance the knowledge and skills of educational personnel, including teachers, librarians, school counselors and other pupil services personnel, school board members, and administrators; programs designed to enhance personal excellence of students and student achievement, including instruction in ethics, performing and creative arts, humanities, activities in physical fitness and comprehensive health education, and participation in community service projects; and other innovative projects which would enhance the educational program and climate of the school, including programs for gifted and talented students, early childhood education programs, community education and programs for youth suicide prevention.

In adding "personal excellence" as an allowable use of Chapter 2 funds, the Congress recognizes that the whole child must be addressed in terms of his/her education, health, and motivation. Personal excellence programs are based on partnerships or coalitions of public and private organizations who commit to pool their expertise and resources. The goal of these programs is to create an integrated school curriculum including basic education, health and physical fitness, and motivation through community service.

It is hoped that through this community supported effort to influence at-risk youth through a variety of activities that meaningful changes will occur in their lives. That the expectations of the community for these young people will be raised and, as a result, their own goals will be raised and more likely to be achieved.

40. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, contains administrative authority which specifies that in order to conduct the activities authorized by this part, each State or local educational agency may use funds reserved for this part to make grants to and enter into contracts with LEAs, institutions of higher education, libraries, museums, and other public and private agencies, organizations, and institutions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment which permits the Secretary to conduct a single external review by a program effectiveness panel to determine the effectiveness of a program which is to be disseminated through the National Diffusion Network (NDN). The conferees further intend that the NDN facilitators be State-based as opposed to regionally-based facilitators. However, the conferees believe that a national private school facilitator would provide significant assistance to the State-based facilitators in identifying and assisting NDN programs in private schools. The conferees therefore envision that a national private school facilitator should be established under the NDN program.

4. The House bill reserves 5% for the Secretary's discretionary grants whereas the Senate amendment reserves 4%. The House bill reserves ½ of 1% for Indian programs and not more than ½ of 1% for the territories whereas the Senate amendment reserves a minimum of ½ of 1% for Indian programs and the remaining amount for the territories.

The Senate recedes with an amendment permitting the use of a consortium arrangement when an LEA applies for funds.

10. Both bills require an application from the State for the receipt of funds, but the House bill provides that the application shall cover a period of three years and specifies three parts of the application—assurances, assessment data, and description—with content requirements for each part while the Senate amendment State Application section does not specify a three year application period and mixes descriptive, assessment, procedure, and assurance requirements in a single subsection.

The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, requires that the State application be developed in consultation with the State agency for higher education and describe how that agency and the SEA have coordinated use of funds under this part.

The Senate recedes with an amendment clarifying the application procedure and the contents of the applications.

11. The House bill, but the Senate amendment, requires a local application. However, both bills require a local assessment of need for assistance before an LEA can receive a grant. The House bill provides for a more detailed assessment as part of its application requirements and requires that programs be evaluated.

The Senate recedes with an amendment simplifying the requirements for the contents of the local applications.

12. Both bills require the SEA to renew assistance to an LEA showing this progress; however, the Senate amendment more precisely defines this standard as showing the involvement of a substantial number of teachers and several grade levels of instruction.

The Senate recedes.

13. The House bill provides a list of uses for the 20% of funds reserved for State use. This includes a 5% cap on administration for each State agency (SEA and SAHE) while the Senate amendment provides 10% of the 75% reserved for LEA programs to be administered by the SEA.

The House recedes with an amendment removing computer learning from the authorized uses of funds.

14. The House bill permits States to reserve up to 20% of the State's grant for direct grants, State-wide programs, technical assistance, and State administration of which no more than 5% can be used for administration (allocated 1% for the State agency for higher education and 4% for the State educational agency). The Senate amendment permits a reservation of 90% of the 75% of a State grant which must be used for elementary and secondary education programs and the remaining 10% to be used as follows: not less than 5% for SEA demonstration and exemplary programs and not more than 5% for SEA technical assistance and administration.

15. The House bill contains a comprehensive listing of activities which may be funded by LEAs and limits funding of local administration to 5% of an LEA's grant. The Senate amendment authorizes funding only of training activities and, if such needs are met, the acquisition of materials and equipment.

On items 14 and 15, the House recedes with an amendment clarifying various uses of funds at the local level.

16. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, delineates the types of activities which SEA and LEA can fund with regard to teacher training.

The House recedes with an amendment that teacher training activities will be referenced generally in the section on higher education and local uses of funds.

17. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, delineates the activities which State higher education agencies can fund with the 25% of the States' grant reserved for their uses. Up to five percent may be used for State assessment and administration and not less than 95% must be used for grants to institutions of higher education for training programs conducted in conjunction with LEAs.

The House recedes with an amendment which clarifies the uses of funds by institutions of higher education.

18. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, provides for a "bypass" for private school participation if an institution of higher education is prohibited by law for serving children and teachers in such schools.

The Senate recedes.

19. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, imposes certain duties on the Secretary regarding technical assistance, evaluations, and reporting standards.

The Senate recedes with an amendment which requires the Secretary to consult with State and local agencies and organizations to develop reporting standards and to submit a report to Congress every two years.

20. Both bills describe the activities which the Secretary may fund from sums reserved to him. The House bill, unlike the Senate amendment, permits grants to professional foreign language associations, reserves 25% of each year's funds for critical foreign language grants, and requires the Secretary to disseminate widely the information concerning the grants. The Senate amendment, unlike the House bill, authorizes cooperative agreements, gives special consideration for grants involving methods and scientific inquiry and giving preference to grants disseminating programs throughout a region.

The Senate recedes with an amendment which clarifies the national uses of funds.

21. The Senate amendment, unlike the House bill, requires the Secretary to reserve annually not to exceed $3 million for the Office of Educational Research and Improvement for conducting evaluation and research activities.

22. The Senate amendment, unlike the House bill, includes a section regarding payments, including a requirement for prompt payment of grants.

On items 21 and 22, the Senate recedes.

23. Both bills authorize presidential awards for foreign language teachers. The House bill, unlike the Senate amendment, requires consultation with representatives of a professional foreign language teacher association. The Senate amendment, unlike the House bill, increases the presidential awards for math and science teachers from 100 to 104 a year. The House bill authorizes $1 million for fiscal year 1988 and such sums for the five succeeding years whereas the Senate amendment contains a payment authorization of $1 million a year for this purpose.

The House recedes with an amendment raising the authorization level to $2 million and requiring consultation with representatives of professional foreign language teacher associations.

24. The House bill extends the Partnership in Education Program by authorizing $10 million for fiscal year 1988 and such sums for the five succeeding years. The Senate amendment authorizes $20 million for fiscal year 1988 and such sums for the five succeeding years for this purpose.

The Senate recedes with an amendment authorizing $15 million for FY 1989 and such sums in fiscal years 1980 through 1993.

25. The Senate amendment, unlike the House bill, contains a definition of "junior or community college".

The Senate recedes. The conference agreement also adds foreign language assistance and presidential awards in math, science and foreign language as parts B and C of this title.

The Star Schools Program and the Foreign Language Assistance Program are also increased in this title with perfecting amendments.

It has been brought to the attention of the conferees that the Young Astronaut Program, as national program of educational significance in mathematics, science, and technology, is beginning to expand in large urban school district and is having an impact in terms of bringing mathematics, science, computer learning, and related technology to historically underrepresented populations.

TITLE III—MAGNET SCHOOLS PROGRAM

1. Magnet Schools. The House bill authorizes appropriations at $115 million for FY 1988 and at such sums through 1993.

The Senate amendment authorizes appropriations at $115 million for FY 1989, $121 million for FY 1990, $127 million for FY 1991, $133 million for FY 1992, and $140 million for FY 1993.

The House recedes with an amendment authorizing appropriations in the amount of $165 million for fiscal year 1989 and such sums through 1993.

2. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, specifies that in making awards from amounts appropriated above $75 million, priority should be given to LEAs which meet the requirements of Section 3002, and have not received a Magnet Schools grant in the previous year.

The House recedes.

In regard to Section 3001(b), availability of funds for grants to agencies not previously assisted, the conferees intend that this provision will not affect prior obligations made under a two-year grant cycle.

Further, the conferees are very concerned about the large number of local educational agencies that have applied for magnet school assistance and have not received funding. In 1987, for example, the Department received 126 applications and awarded 38 grants; over two-thirds of the districts applying were rejected. The conferees recognize that many of these unfunded local educational agencies, including such cities as Cleveland, Boston, Los Angeles, and Detroit, have a real need for magnet school funds. The conference agreement, therefore, requires that out of new money appropriated for the program, the Secretary shall give special consideration to applications which were not funded during the previous grant cycle. This provision applies only to funds appropriated above the fiscal year 1987 level of $75 million. The conference agreement makes clear that the Secretary shall not use previous funding as a factor in awarding the first $75 million.

3. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, retains the current law provision that an LEA is eligible to receive assistance under this Act if it received $1 million less in the first FY after the repeal of the Emergency School Aid Act.

The House recedes.

4. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes in its application assurances that the agency will not engage in handicapped or sexual discrimination.

The House recedes.

5. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, also includes as application requirements the following: (a) a description of how assistance made available will be used to promote desegregation; (b) a provision of assurances that the agency will carry out a high quality education program that will encourage greater parental choice and involvement; and (c) a description of the number in which the LEA will continue the magnet schools program after assistance is no longer available under this part.

The House recedes with an amendment rephrasing the provision of assurances that the agency will carry out a high quality education program in order to assure that greater parental decision-making and involvement will be encouraged.

6. The House bill indicates that the Secretary shall not make a determination about the award of funds solely on the basis of whether an applicant received an award in a prior funding cycle. The Senate amendment specifies that in awarding grants with the first $75 million, the Secretary shall not take into account whether an LEA has received an award in the prior funding cycle.

The House recedes with an amendment stating the provision as applying in "any prior funding cycle."

7. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, allows the Secretary to give special consideration to the degree to which the program involves the collaborative efforts of institutions of higher education, community-based organizations, the appropriate SEA, or any other private organization.

The House recedes.

8. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, retains the current law provision which indicates that the Secretary may waive the prohibition against the reduction of Chapter 2 assistance received and permit such a reduction if the State demonstrates that the assistance under Chapter 2 is not necessary to the particular LEA.

The House recedes.

9. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, requires that notwithstanding section 412 of GEPA, not more than 15% of funds available for each FY for the purpose of this title may remain available for obligation and expenditure during the succeeding FY.

The Senate recedes.

10. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, specifies that the provisions of this subsection shall not apply if grants are not awarded in a timely manner.

The Senate recedes.

11. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, specifies that the Secretary may not reduce any payment under this title for any FY by any amount on the basis of the availability of funds pursuant to sections 412 (b) and (c) of GEPA. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires that payments for a FY shall remain available for obligation and expenditure by the recipient until the end of the succeeding FY, except that no such agency shall receive more than $4 million in any one FY.

The Senate recedes requiring that the Secretary may not reduce any payment under this title for any fiscal year on the basis of the availability of funds pursuant to GEPA. The House recedes on the provision that payments for a fiscal year shall remain available for obligation and expenditure by the recipient until the end of the succeeding fiscal year except that no agency shall receive more than $4 million in any one fiscal year.

12. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires that to the extent practicable, for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall award grants to LEAs under this title no later than July 1 of the applicable fiscal year.

The House recedes with an amendment changing "July 1, 1987" to "June 30, 1988".

13. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes a new Part B, Magnet Schools for Educational Improvement at an authorization level beginning in FY 1989 at $35 million and triggered by an appropriation for Part A of $100 million.

The House recedes with an amendment moving these provisions, as amended, to the Secretary's fund for innovation and changing the name of the program to Alternative Curriculum Schools. The Alternative Curriculum Schools program will not receive any funds until the current magnet schools program is funded at $165 million.

6. The House bill retains the "National Advisory Council on Women's Educational Programs" within the Department of Education.

The Senate amendment abolishes the Council.

The House recedes. The conferees want to stress that the abolition of the National Advisory Council should, in no way, be interpreted as an abandonment of or lack of commitment to women's educational equity. Quite the contrary, it is the conferees' hope that the funds used to support the Council would go instead to the support of program activities on behalf of women's educational equity, which is an important and valuable program that deserves the increased funding provided in the conference agreement. The conferees also want to stress the need within the Federal Government for a national council that will deal with the general concerns of the women of this nation. The conferees, therefore, would urge that serious consideration be given to the re-establishment of a council similar to the National Advisory Council for Women formerly administered within the Department of Labor.

TITLE VII—BILINGUAL EDUCATION

The Senate recedes.

2. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, in its statement of policy contains language as follows: (1) reliance on student evaluation procedures which are inappropriate for limited English proficient students (LEP) has resulted in the disproportionate representation of LEP students in special education, gifted and talented, and other special programs; and (2) many schools fail to meet the full instructional needs of LEP students who also may be handicapped or gifted and talented.

The House recedes. The conferees' substitute sets forth the finding that limited English proficient students are disproportionately represented (both over- and under-represented) in special instructional programs, including special education and programs for gifted and talented students because of reliance on linguistically inappropriate student evaluation procedures which fail to correctly measure the needs and abilities of limited English proficient students.

The Senate recedes with an amendment which specifies that the Local Contribution Rate (LCR) for coterminous agencies shall be the lesser of 70% of the average per pupil expenditure in all States or the amount necessary to raise that agency to its State average. This provision does not apply to any coterminous agency within a State whose equalization laws would prevent the district from receiving the additional funding provided by this measure or who would reduce their State aid in proportion to the increase in Federal dollars.

11. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, allows for payments to be rounded to the nearest whole dollar. It further provides for the Secretary to return to the United States Treasury any funds recovered from LEAs because of overpayments or unallowable expenses that were made at least 5 years earlier. 15–19.9 percent (Sub-Super As)	60	15	25
0–14.9 percent (Regular As)	40	10	50

If there is not enough money available to fully fund any of the above steps, Super As are to receive 72% of available funds for that step, Sub-Super As 3%, and Regular As 25%.

	Percentage of entitlement
	Step 1	Step 2	Step 3
Percentage of "B" children in district:
20–100 percent (Super Bs)	20	30	50
0–19.9 percent (Regular As)	10	5	85

The conferees wish to make clear that the amendment does not, in any way, make these funds categorical nor does it limit the local education agency's authority to put these funds in a general fund and expend them for basic support. This amendment relates to treatment of these funds within the context of a State aid system and does not affect the basic nature of impact aid.

16. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, holds harmless all districts receiving 3(a) and Super B payments at their 1987 per pupil expenditure classifications. If sums are insufficient to pay this amount in full, then this amount shall be ratably reduced.

This provision is to take effect immediately upon enactment.

NATIONAL ASSESSMENT OF EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS

1. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, amends and expands the scope of the National Assessment for Educational Progress to: report every two years on reading and mathematics, every four years on writing and science, and every six years on history, geography, and civics. In addition, the Senate amendment expands NAEP to provide reports on a national, regional and state basis, and enables the States to participate in the NAEP assessment on a voluntary basis. The authorization is $12.5 million for FY 1989, $18.54 for FY 1990, $17.9 for FY 1991, and $19.6 for each of fiscal years 1992 and 1993.

The House recedes with an amendment limiting the expansion of the National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP), both in terms of subject areas and State representative sampling; placing the NAEP in the National Center for Educational Statistics, reporting to the Commissioner of Educational Statistics; requiring a comprehensive study by an independent group of the 1990 and 1992 State representative demonstration assessments; and strengthening the independence of the National Assessment Governing Board.

The Commissioner is authorized to carry out the National Assessment by grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements with qualified organizations or consortia thereof. By this language, the conferees intend that the Commissioner, with the advice of the National Assessment Governing Board, may have either a single grant, contract, or cooperative agreement or any combination of grants, contracts or cooperative agreements.

The expanded National Assessment shall assess the performance of students in reading, mathematics, science, writing, history/geography and other areas selected by the Board. The conferees strongly urge that other areas considered by the Board will include civics and economics.

The expansion of the National Assessment to collect state representative data, on a voluntary basis, is an outgrowth of current NAEP practice which lets states obtain such data if they pay the costs of collecting it. The provisions in the Hawkins-Stafford Education Amendments will build on this practice to determine whether an expanded collection of state representative NAEP data is feasible and desirable. The collection of such information will allow participating states to compare themselves to each other and to national NAEP averages. In addition, the data will let state officials monitor their state's progress on NAEP assessments over time.

The conferees wish to emphasize that the purpose of the expansion of NAEP is to provide policy makers with more and better state level information about the educational performance of their school children so that participating states might better measure the educational performance of their children. The goal is not to provide a scorecard by which to rank state educational systems. Data from this assessment is not to be used to compare, rank or evaluate local schools or school districts.

The independent evaluation of the state representative data demonstrations is an important part of the changes authorized here.

If results are adjusted to take contextual factors into account, the effects of alternative adjustments should be tested. If unadjusted results are presented for groups of States classified in terms of contextual factors, alternative classifications should be assessed.

The evaluation should also explore the extent to which results are affected by decisions about the test itself. For example, how are the rankings of States altered if the weight given to various skills is changed and what skills should be given priority? Are the rankings of some States affected by the number of high-achieving students whose scores are constrained by ceiling effects?

If possible, the evaluation should also assess the extent to which results are shaped by differences in the closeness of the match between the content of the test and the curricula of the States.

The conferees intend the independent evaluation of State representative State demonstration assessments will, at a minimum, assess the extent to which differences among States in scores are meaningful and reliable, how well the States participating in the State representative sample do, in fact, constitute a representative sample of the States adequate to assess opportunities and risks in a nation-wide NAEP with state-by-state comparisions. To do so, the evaluation must assess the extent to which results are affected by a variety of extraneous factors. This shall include consideration of the representativeness of participating States in terms of regional representation, ethnic and racial composition, per capita income, curricula, and other variables that influence aggregate indicators of educational achievement, such as which students are excluded from testing (for example, handicapped students or students with limited proficiency in English).

If results are adjusted to take contextual factors into account, the effects of alternative adjustments should be tested. If unadjusted results are presented for groups of States classified in terms of contextual factors, alternative classifications should be assessed.

The report shall also assess National Assessment presentations including their effectiveness in providing educators, policy makers, and the general public with useable information and in providing readily understandable information to interpret the strengths and weaknesses of National Assessment findings. The evaluator shall analyze whether National Assessment presentations adequately present data in the context of factors which affect educational achievement including per capita income, per pupil expenditures, ethnic and racial composition and level of urbanization.

The NAEP contractor shall provide the evaluator, in a timely fashion, with the data needed for carrying out the evaluation. For example, data on the characteristics of non-participation will also be provided to the evaluator. The contractor shall also provide the evaluator with information on secure test items needed for analysis. The evaluator, however, will not release secure items to the public, in print or on tape.

(a) The Senate amendment, but not the Hosue bill, changes the name, the membership, and the responsibilities of the current Assessment Policy Committee.

The House recedes with an amendment changing the membership of the National Assessment Governing Board to be more representative of professional educators and testing experts.

Each State choosing to participate in assessments made on a State basis shall cover the cost of coordinating such assessments within the State, in addition to the cost of administering assessments at the school level. Such coordination will include technical assistance to local schools selected for the State sample, securing cooperation of schools, and scheduling tests at times convenient for sample schools, as well as monitoring the sample selection following the design and standards established for State tests.

FUND FOR THE IMPROVEMENT AND REFORM OF SCHOOLS AND TEACHING

2. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes a new Fund for the Improvement and Reform of Schools and Teaching. This authorization gives the Secretary authority to make grants to SEAs, LEAs, IHEs, and nonprofit organizations to improve the performance of students and teachers. Grants may not be less than $5,000 nor more than $125,000. The Senate amendment further mandates the establishment of a Board to set priorities for awarding grants and to review and evaluate these grants. The authorization is $18 million for FY 1989, $18.9 million for FY 1990, $19.9 million for FY 1991, $21 million for FY 1992, and $22 million for FY 1993.

The House recedes with an amendment to include Pride in Schools as an activity authorized under this part and to add Family-School Partnerships under this part with one-third of the total authorization for this part reserved for this function.

OPTIONAL TESTS FOR ACADEMIC EXCELLENCE

3. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, reserves $2 million out of funds made available for the National Assessment of Educational Progress in each fiscal year for the Optional Test for Academic Excellence. The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary to approve or prepare comprehensive tests of academic excellence to identify outstanding students in the 11th grade. Such tests shall be voluntary.

The House recedes with an amendment authorizing this activity under the Secretary's fund for innovation and removing the reservation of $2 million from the National Assessment of Educational Progress for such purpose.

COMPREHENSIVE CHILD DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

1. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, amends the Head Start Act to add an additional authorization for Comprehensive Child Development Centers. The Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services is authorized to make grants to eligible agencies to support projects which encourage comprehensive services for infants and young children from low-income families. The authorization is $25 million for each of the fiscal years 1989 through 1993.

The House recedes with an amendment which makes technical changes, strengthens the evaluation provision, and requires for two years a 4% increase in appropriations for Head Start over the previous year's appropriations before this new program can be funded.

The underlying premise of this section is to demonstrate that educational failure of extremely poor children can be prevented by providing intensive supportive services to the children and their families on an early, continuous and comprehensive basis.

Therefore, it is the intent of the conferees that projects funded in the first year be given priority for funding in subsequent years with an expected project life being five years.

SPECIAL GRANT FOR EDUCATION AND TRAINING FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH DISABILITIES

1. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes a $4 million grant for fiscal year 1988 to the State of Utah for the education and training of the disabled.

The House recedes with an amendment broadening and clarifying the purpose of the grant and removing a specific reference to the State of Utah.

TITLE III—AUDIT, NATIONAL CENTER, AND OTHER PROGRAMS

ENFORCEMENT UNDER THE GENERAL EDUCATION PROVISIONS ACT

1. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, contains changes to the enforcement section of the General Education Provisions Act.

The Senate recedes.

2. The House bill creates an Office of Administrative Law Judges (ALJs) and would formalize along the lines of the Administrative Procedures Act the procedures to be used in the conduct of hearings. Judges shall be chosen pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act with special emphasis placed on the candidates' experience in State and local educational agencies and federal education laws.

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

3. The House bill provides that the Equal Access to Justice Act shall apply to the fees and costs of the parties.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees intend that the provisions of the Equal Access to Justice Act regarding the awarding of attorney fees only to all Department proceedings, not just those before the Office of Administrative Law Judges.

4. The House bill allows the judge to order a party to produce information leading to admissible evidence through the use of deposition, interrogatories, and documents.

The Senate recedes with an amendment stipulating that the period for discovery should be 90 days, unless the judge extends the period.

5. The House bill grants judges the power to issue subpoenas.

The Senate recedes.

6. The House bill requires the Secretary to establish a process for voluntary mediation of disputes.

The Senate recedes with an amendment giving the Secretary in a mediated dispute the right to use the same criteria used by an administrative law judge to determine measure of recovery, e.g., proportionate harm to an identifiable Federal interest; consideration of mitigating circumstances; and the possibility of total "forgiveness" based on such factors.

Furthermore, the amendment adds a provision referencing Rule 408 of the Federal Rules of Evidence to be used during the proceedings. The provision bars as inadmissible offers, conduct, and statements made in compromise negotiations in the settlement or potential settlement of disputes. Finally, the amendment requires that, when mediation takes place before the Office of Administrative Law Judges, it be limited to 120 days, with extensions being granted at the mediator's discretion.

7. The House bill requires that the Department's preliminary departmental decision (PDD) establishes a prima facie case. Failure by the recipient to maintain adequate records constitutes a prima facie case. The recipient has 30 days from receipt of written notice of the PDD to file a review with the Office of Administrative Law Judges. State recipients in State-administered programs would be required to transmit a copy of the PDD to any affected subrecipient within 10 days and to consult with these subrecipients regarding the application for ALJ review. The burden of proof in proceedings before the ALJs would continue to be on the recipient. The Secretary would review the facts found by the judges on the basis of the substantial evidence test. The Department would be barred from taking a collection action pending the completion of judicial review.

The Senate recedes with an amendment placing a 90-day limit on the period between the preliminary departmental decision and a hearing (when requested), with the possibility of an extension by the ALJ for "good cause" and requiring appeals from the Office of the Administrative Law Judges be filed with the Secretary within 30 days of notice of the judge's decision.

The confereees intend that the judge shall readily grant an extension for good cause including granting extensions to facilitate mediation and as justice would warrant.

Finally, the amendment requires the Office of Administrative Law Judges to determine as "expeditiously as possible" whether to accept a case for review as meeting a prima facie case; requires that discovery be limited to 90 days, but that the judge may extend the discovery period at the judge's discretion; and requires that a petition for review of the decision of the Office of Administrative Law Judges be filed with the Secretary within 30 days of notice of the decision by the judge.

8. The House bill requires that a decision of the ALJs becomes final agency action, and ripe for judicial review under section 458 of the Act, sixty days after the recipient receives written notice of the ALJ's decision, unless the Secretary either modifies or sets aside the decision (in which case the decision becomes the final agency action when the recipient receives written notice of the Secretary's action), or remands it to the ALJs for further consideration. The Secretary would be required to publish final agency decisions in the Federal Register or another appropriate publication.

The Senate recedes.

9. The House bill raises from $50,000 to $200,000 the limit on the Secretary's authority to compromise a claim.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that no interest arising from a claim shall be charged during the administrative review of the preliminary departmental decision.

10. The House bill requires that the Department recover funds in an amount that is proportionate to the extent of the harm a violation caused to an identifiable Federal interest. This section would identify a number of such Federal interests. In addition, this section would identify certain mitigating cricumstances which, if present, would bar the recovery of funds. These mitigating circumstances exist (1) if the violation occurred as a result of reasonable reliance on incorrect Department guidance, (2) if the violation occurred as a result of the Department's failure to reply within 90 days to a written SEA or LEA guidance request certified as lawful by the chief legal officer of the SEA, or (3) if the recipient actually and reasonably relied on a judicial decree issued to the receipient. In addition, the Secretary would be required to disseminate responses to SEA guidance requests and periodically review written requests for guidance to determine the need for new or supplementary regulations.

The Senate recedes with an amendment making mitigating circumstances a factor to be considered by the ALJ in determining the measure of recovery rather than a complete bar to recovery, but allowing the ALJ to determine that no Federal recovery is justified because of the presence of mitigating circumstances; with an amendment requiring that in order for the 90 day response time to apply, the requesting entity must send the written request by certified letter, return confirmation of receipt requested; with a clarifying amendment stating that proportionality of harm and mitigating circumstances shall be the standard for determining the amount of recovery by all levels of review within the Department, not just the Office of Administrative Law Judges and the Office of the Secretary; and with a technical amendment.

"Written guidance" is intended to mean written guidance issued at the Office of Director level or above, addressing a specific request from a local or State educational agency regarding a policy, interpretation, or question pursuant to a Federal law, implementing regulations, or non-binding guidance issued by the Secretary. It is not intended to encompass telephone conversations, informal discussions at conferences, informational handouts provided at meetings with Department of Education staff, or written communication below the Office of Director level, unless such communication meets the requirements of section 453 (b)(2)(B).

11. The House bill provides that whenever the Secretary has reason to believe that a recipient of a grant or cooperative agreement is failing to comply substantially with any applicable requirement of law, the Secretary has the option to withhold further payments under that program, seek a cease and desist order, enter into a compliance agreement, to take any other action authorized by law.

The Senate recedes.

12. The House bill authorizes the Secretary to withhold funds from a recipient that is failing to comply substantially with an applicable requirement of law, and also establishes the procedures, including an opportunity for a hearing before the Office of Administrative Law Judges, the Secretary must follow to withhold funds. The proposed section is substantially similar to current law.

The Senate recedes.

13. The House bill authorizes the Secretary to issue a complaint against a recipient that is failing to comply substantially with an applicable requirement of law, and also establishes the procedures, including an opportunity for a hearing before the Administrative Law Judges, the Secretary must follow to withhold funds. The proposed section 455 is substantially similar to the current section 453 of the Act.

The Senate recedes.

14. The House bill allows the Secretary to suspend a withholding action pursuant to a compliance agreement entered into by the State or local educational agency with the Federal government. The compliance agreement is in effect for a specified period unless the State or local fails to comply with the agreement.

The Senate recedes.

15. The House bill provides for judicial review in the appropriate United States Court of Appeals of final agency action regarding recoveries under section 452, withholding under proposed section 455, and cease and desist orders under section 456. The proposed section 458 is substantially similar to the current section 455 of the Act.

The Senate recedes.

16. The House bill authorizes the Secretary, whenever the Department recovers funds from a recipient because of a misuse of funds, to return up to 75 percent of the recovered funds to the recipient. The proposed section 459 is substantially similar to the current section 456 of the Act.

The Senate recedes.

17. The House bill defines the terms "recipient" and "applicable program."

18. The House bill makes these amendments effective 180 days after enactment.

The Senate recedes.

21. The House bill requires that the National Center for Education Statistics be headed by a Commissioner appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The Senate recedes with an amendment stating that the director of the Center for Education Statistics on the effective date of this Act may be the Acting Commissioner until June 21, 1991.

The conferees intend that the director for the Center shall be the Acting Commissioner until June 21, 1991, unless removed for cause.

The Senate also recedes with an amendment establishing an Associate Commissioner for Date Collection and Dissemination. The conferees intend that the Associate Commissioners will be members of the Senior Executive Service (SES) and will be selected for their expertise in the relevant areas

The conferees are especially concerned that the Associate Commissioner for Data Collection and Dissemination be an individual knowledgeable about all levels of American Education and be able to link educators at the state, local and institutional level, the professional associations and groups representing these individuals, and the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES). The conferees also intend that this associate commissioner will take steps to increase and improve U.S. participation in international educational research and statistical activities.

The conferees have highlighted a $9,500,000 separate authorization for the National Assessment for Educational Progress (NAEP) for fiscal year 1989 and a $2,000,000 authorization for the State co-operative program for fiscal year 1989. The conferees intend that for the subsequent years, any increases in NAEP funding will not be at the expense of other programs and services within the Center's purview.

22. The House bill appoints the Commissioner of Education Statistics rather than the Assistant Secretary of Education as non-voting president of the Advisory Council on Education Statistics.

The Senate recedes.

23. The House bill empowers the Commissioners of Education Statistics to enter into contracts or other financial arrangements to carry out activities authorized under Section 406.

The Senate recedes.

24. The House bill requires that the Center conduct an annual national survey of dropout and retention rates as an education indicator and report such information annually to Congress.

The Senate recedes.

25. The House bill requires a national study of financial aid pursuant to the Higher Education Act; a decennial analysis of the social and economic status of children in local school districts; and a national longitudinal study of elementary and secondary students' educational progress, intellectual development and economic prosperity.

The Senate recedes with an amendment ensuring postsecondary participation in the study; keying the study into the longitudinal study already underway; and adding a provision for the voluntary collection of public library data.

26. The House bill requires that date gathered for such studies shall be confidential and shall not be individually identifiable as used in reports required by this section.

The Senate recedes.

27. The House bill establishes a National Education Statistics System for the purpose of producing and maintaining, with the cooperation of the States, comparable and uniform educational information and data useful for policy-making at Federal, State, and local levels.

The Senate recedes.

28. School Improvement Act of 1987 Data. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, provides that the study shall include data on the performance of Chapter 1-served students.

The Senate recedes.

FAMILY SCHOOL PARTNERSHIP

1. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes a new Secretary's discretionary grant program, entitled the Family-School Partnership Act, to provide grants to LEAs for innovative family-school partnership activities. The authorization is $10 million for FY 1989, $10.5 million for FY 1990, $11 million for FY 1991, $12.5 million for FY 1992, and $14 million for FY 1993.

The House recedes with an amendment to incorporate this program into the Fund for the Improvement and Reform of Schools and Teaching which is authorized at $30 million for fiscal year 1989 and at such sums through 1993. The Family School Partnership Program is to receive one-third of the $30 million authorization level for fiscal year 1989 and one-third of such sums through 1993.

PARENTAL CHOICE

1. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes a new Secretary's discretionary grant program, entitled the Parental Choice Open Enrollment Demonstration Program in Public Schools, to provide demonstration grants to LEAs to develop and implement an open enrollment program among public schools in the district. The authorization is $15 million for FY 1989, $16 million for FY 1990, $17 million for FY 1991, $18 million for FY 1992, and $19 million for FY 1993.

The Senate recedes.

RURAL EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES

1. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes a new Secretary's grant program, entitled the Rural Educational Opportunities Program, to establish and operate 10 regional rural educational assistance centers. The authorization is $10 million for FY 1989, $10.5 for FY 1990, $11 million for FY 1991, $12 million for FY 1992, and $13 million for FY 1993.

The House recedes with an amendment authorizing a minimum of 10 rural education programs to be established by grant or contract to institutions of higher education, private non-profit agencies and organizations, regional educational laboratories, technical assistance centers established pursuant to section 1437(d), public agencies, State education agencies, or combinations of such agencies or institutions with a charge to pay particular attention to, and report on, problems related to districts with declining enrollments and ways in which districts can combine management to provide effective programs.

The agreement will allow for combined applications including one or more eligible entities, thus allowing for the participation of consortia of institutions of higher education and other combinations of agencies and organizations.

SECRETARY'S FUND FOR INNOVATION IN EDUCATION

1. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, establishes the Secretary's Fund for Innovation in Education. The authorization for this fund is $20 million for FY 1989, $21 million for FY 1990, $22 million for FY 1991, $23 million for FY 1992, and $25 million for FY 1993. This Fund gives the Secretary authority to provide grants to LEAs, SEAs, IHES and other public agencies and private nonprofit organizations under six new programs established under this Fund.

(a) Materials for Use in Educational Television and Radio Programs.—Grants for the development and operation of educational television and radio materials, and teacher and other school personnel training in the use of such programming.

The House recedes with an amendment to consolidate two provisions into a single program called Technology Education and to add an additional section for the optional test for academic excellence, and to remove the reservation of $2 million for optional tests; and move part (B), Alternative Curriculum Schools of Title III of "Title I" to this part.

Alternative Curriculum Schools would strengthen the quality of education offered throughout the local school district as a means of providing improving achievement and attracting majority school children to the public schools. The new program would have an authorization of $35 million, but no funding for this new program would be provided until the Magnet Schools program appropriation reaches $165 million in any fiscal year. The Alternative Curriculum Schools Program would: (1) require that only high school districts with minority enrollments of 65% or higher are eligible to apply; (2) require that any participating school receiving assistance must have a minority enrollment of at least 50% (3) require the school district or consortia of local school districts to demonstrate in its application the extent to which the federal funds will contribute to reducing racial isolation and achieving desegregation within the local educational agency or consortia thereof; (4) include statutory language indicating that the award of these funds may not be used as evidence in any litigation or administrative proceeding questioning whether or not the school district(s) is desegregated.

As illustrated by the requirement that the application indicate how establishment of an Alternative Curriculum School will promote integration throughout the district, the conferees intend that the minority composition of the other public schools in the local educational agency where the alternative curriculum school is established shall not increase as a result of the establishment of the "alternative curriculum school."

(b) Programs for Computer-Based Instruction.—Grants for the acquisition and leasing of computer software and hardware as well as teacher training programs in computer education.

The House recedes with an amendment of $20 million for FY 1989 and such sums.

(c) Programs for the Improvement of Comprehensive School Health Education.—The House bill enables the Secretary to establish an Office of Comprehensive School Health. The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary to fund projects which improve elementary and secondary school health education, and requires that the Secretary fund these projects through an Office of Comprehensive School Health Education established within the Department of Education.

(d) Telecommunication and Video Instruction Program.—Grants for programs which use telecommunications and video resources for school instruction.

The House recedes with the amendment described in (a).

(e) Youth Suicide Prevention Programs.—The Secretary is authorized to make grants to LEAs and private nonprofit organizations to establish and operate youth suicide prevention programs.

The Senate recedes.

(f) Pride in Schools.—The Secretary is authorized to make grants to schools to establish and operate programs which involve students in the care of and responsibility for the school.

The House recedes with an amendment moving Pride in Schools to FIRST as a permissible use of funds.

TITLE V

INDIAN EDUCATION

1. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, specifically recognizes and authorizes all B.I.A. funded schools in existence or planned as of Jan. 1, 1987.

The House recedes.

2. The House bill prohibits any designated action at any Bureau funded school, except upon formal request of the tribal council of a single tribe school or the tribal councils representing an aggregate of 90% or more of the students in a multi-tribal school.

The Senate amendment prohibits the transfer of the operation or facilities of any Bureau funded school (or school program) which is operated on April 1, 1987, unless approved by the tribal governing body. This is defined as the tribal governing body or bodies representing at least 90% of the students.

The House recedes with an amendment which incorporates the other negative actions in the list of actions prohibited by the Senate language.

3. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, says that if the Secretary makes a request to Congress for legislation to override the requirement for tribal approval, the Secretary must comply with the study and notice requirement in the statute before making such request.

The Senate recedes. The Conferees have determined that the language in the current statute, coupled with the amendment, makes clear that the Secretary may take no unilateral action, and that any recommendation to Congress for subsequent legislation permitting a prohibited action would need to be accompanied with the proper study.

4. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, states that no action may be taken to close, consolidate, or substantially curtail a Bureau funded boarding school for failure to meet the dormitory criteria in any fiscal year for which the Secretary has not submitted the Bureau wide facilities report and recommendations, as required by current law. (Note—see note 10 on House provision)

The Senate recedes. See note 10.

5. Technical Difference.

The House recedes.

6. The House bill allows the Secretary to close, consolidate or substantially curtail a program in a school when required by facilities conditions which constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety without regard to the statutory study and consultation provisions. However, no action could be taken until a reasonable period had been allowed for the conduct of a health and safety inspection by an outside entity. The entity would either be one chosen by the tribe(s) involved or, if notice of the inspection is provided to the tribe when the request is made, by the Secretary. No action could be taken if no threat was found by the outside inspector. The section is a limitation on the current statutory provision.

The Senate amendment states that when the Secretary decides to close, consolidate or substantially curtail a school or program (as authorized by current law) and the closure is to be, in the Secretary's estimate, for longer than 1 year, the Secretary must send to Congress, no less than 6 months after the action taken, a report on the reasons for the action and the remedial actions taken or planned.

The House recedes with an amendment that stipulates that only health and safety officers shall make these determinations, according to current guidelines which shall be in effect until regulations are developed. Regulations should be developed by June 30, 1989, provided that if they are not published by this time, closures, consolidations or curtailments would have to be followed by outside evaluations, conducted pursuant to the House bill.

7. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, changes the term "Indian controlled contract schools" to "contract schools"—no substantive effect, but see Title II, Part B.

The House recedes.

8. The House bill directs the Assistant Secretary to develop regulations for new schools and program expansions in Bureau operated schools and schools contracted under P.L. 93-638, the Indian Self-Determination Act (Note—see note 65—this provision would not apply to schools with the grants proposed). The Secretary, through regulations, could not base a decision primarily on geographical proximity to public education, and would have to give equal weight to a number of factors.

The Senate bill is, with a few technical differences, similar to the House bill, except for five provisions—the Senate directs the Secretary to prescribe the regulations; the regulations on expansions would apply to all Bureau funded schools (including those which use the proposed grants authority); this provision is made applicable specifically to program expansions which increase the amount of Bureau money received; the factors to be considered are not required to be given equal weight; and the success or failure of the applicants (not just the Bureau program) is to be considered.

The House recedes with an amendment stating that all expansions or new school starts would be evaluated and approved under the same set of regulations, and setting out the factors to be included in those regulations and the standards and policies to be applied. With respect to the factor relating to the geographic and demographic circumstances of the programs being considered, the Conferees especially direct the Bureau to interpret this provision so as to fulfill its trust responsibility to its Indian student constituents. An example of a geographic circumstance warranting special consideration are climatic conditions or terrain which render a group of students' places of residence inaccessible for periods of the year.

Failure of current education programs to make adequate provision for this would merit special Bureau review and consideration of the necessity to provide an educational alternative close to home. Similarly, past Bureau attempts to define geographic proximity of public or alternative education in terms of time traveled or distance traveled are specifically rejected by the Conferees. Any consideration of the geographic proximity must take into account the age of the children, and distances and times as measured at all times of the year and in all types of weather.

Finally, the Conferees wish to explain that submission by the applicant of information on the factors to be considered relative to the program for which the application is filed shall constitute a sufficient application. These are the factors which are within the control or cognizance of the applicant. It would be patently unfair to rule an application as insufficient due to an omission of information which may be unattainable by the applicant. The Bureau shall be chiefly responsible for obtaining the relevant information concerning existing programs, though the Conferees intend that the applicant and all parties having knowledge pertinent to the application will cooperate with the Secretary in this regard. Failure to do so would certainly be a factor in the Secretary's deliberations.

9. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, stipulates the date for implementation of the expansions.

The House recedes.

10. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, stipulates that no negative action may be taken against a school in existence on January 1, 1987, for failure to meet the dormitory criteria, and that before February 1, 1988, the Secretary should provide the required report to Congress on compliance (similar to Senate provision—see note #4).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that changes the date.

11. The House bill incorporates most of the current regulations dealing with Bureau education programs (except for personnel regulations) into the statute by reference and restricts the Secretary's and Assistant Secretary's authority to amend them.

The Senate amendment creates a process for review of regulatory proposals by regional review panels which the Secretary would have to follow before any regulatory action. Certain members of the review panels, which should not be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act, are stipulated. The Secretary may take emergency or temporary action without review, provided that as soon as practicable, input is sought. The provisions of the Senate amendment would not apply to any regulations or amendments which were drafted and under formal review prior to October 1, 1987.

The Senate recedes with an amendment limiting the length of incorporation on all of the regulations other than those dealing with policy to June 30, 1989. The policy regulations would be incorporated permanently. The Conferees intend that future regulatory actions comport with the new provisions regarding consultation. See note 37.

12. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires a 90 day comment period for the Bureau Indian education regulations and states that no regulation may become effective until 90 days after its preliminary publication. This provision shall not apply to regulations published before October 1, 1987. Also, applicability of any Federal law restricting or limiting employee communications is specifically waived, insofar as the communication relates to regulatory action involving Indian education.

The House recedes with an amendment which requires that all regulations be published for a 90 day comment period, and published in final form before becoming effective. The amendment defines the term "regulation".

13. The House bill and the Senate amendment are similar, except for the following: an additional weight for handicapped students; an additional weight for full-time and part-time gifted and talented students; the statement that the supervisor and school board of a school shall determine when a less than 9 month program is needed; and a requirement for additional funding when needed to allow a school to comply with State standards which are in addition to minimum standards needed for accreditation.

The House recedes with an amendment that changes the effective date of these changes, deletes the provision regarding part-time gifted and talented programs, makes the full-time gifted and talented provision subject to a definition to be developed by a tribally controlled postsecondary institution or group under another provision of this Act and the availability of funds, further defines the factor regarding State standards and limits this factor to two years, and required a General Accounting Office study of the needs relative to a preschool handicapped factor. In conducting this study, the Conferees direct the General Accounting Office to work with, and consult with, tribes and tribal organizations, as well as the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service, to determine the needs and the populations to be served, as stipulated in the statute.

The Conferees intend that these factors be the factors used for these students in lieu of the factors ordinarily used for the computation of academic weights. Other weights, relating to boarding or special needs or programs, would be cumulative.

14. The House bill amends the Indian Student Equalization Formula to make the administrative cost factor a part of the formula.

The Senate bill creates a new grant authority for administrative cost payments, which would be in lieu of any payments to which contractors might otherwise be entitled. The Senate also spells out specific uses and purposes for the money.

The House recedes.

15. The Senate amendent, but not the House bill, stipulates the sums received under this provision will be in addition to and shall not reduce other funds received for the school program.

The House recedes.

16. The Senate amendent, but not the House bill, stipulates that the cost rate shall be used for all direct programs which share common administrative cost functions, and will be made applicable to all others, at the tribe's option. (See Note 19.)

The House recedes with an amendment.

17. The House bill sets the administrative cost percentage for each school as 12% of the total direct program funds of each contractor (for education and shared/administrative cost activities) times 50% of the average total direct program funds for all contractors divided by the sum of such direct program funds of the contractor plus the average of such direct programs funds for all Bureau contractors. This figure would be adjusted for the special cost factors for isolation, multiple programs or multiple cost accounting (see Note 27—the Senate has similar provisions). The product (as expressed to two decimal places) is then used in the Indian Student Equalization Formula computations. Computations would be made on preceding year's data (see Note 23) and the formula would be implemented in FY 1989.

The Senate amendment makes the administrative cost percentage for each school the percentage determined by dividing the direct cost base for a tribe or tribal organization (see Note 23) by the minimum base rate (see Note 25—initially 12%) plus [the amount equal to the standard direct cost base (see Note 26—initially $600,000) multiplied by the maximum base rate (see Note 24—initially 50%)] by the sum of the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization for the FY, plus the standard direct cost base. This amount would be adjusted for an isolation and a multiple program factor. This amount (to the second decimal) would be multiplied by the contractor's direct cost base to give a separate grant amount.

The House recedes with an amendment correcting an omission.

18. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, states that the funds received pursuant to this section shall not be considered for over- or under-recovery computations.

The House recedes.

19. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, requires the Bureau, as lead agency, to pay administrative costs based upon the formula for all flow-through Education Department programs contracted, regardless of other provisions governing specific programs, provided that the Bureau shall reduce the amount received by administrative cost payments actually received under other programs and shall take such actions as may be be necessary to recoup the funds from the other sources. The administrative rate under this section shall be applied to all Bureau programs contracted (see Note 16 for similar Senate provision).

The Senate recedes with an amendment deleting the provision making this percentage applicable to any other tribal program (other than those specified in this Act).

The Conferees intend that the Bureau interpret this provision in the following manner: the Secretary shall calculate the amount of flow-through funds for each contractor and grantee and pay to each, as part of this administrative cost grant, an amount equal to the percentage determined under this provision multiplied by the flow-through amount, regardless of any limitation on administrative costs contained in another status. This amount shall be reduced, or "offset", by the amount actually received by a contractor or grantee from the flow-through program for administrative costs. The Secretary shall then seek to recoup, from the Federal agency having primary jurisdiction over the flow-through program, the difference between the amount paid under this provision to support the flow-through program and the amount of administrative costs actually received under the program.

20. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, defines administrative cost. The provisions are similar to the House provisions. (See Note 34.)

The House recedes.

21. Both House bill and Senate amendment define the Bureau elementary and secondary education functions, with only technical differences.

The House recedes.

22. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, defines the term "tribal elementary and secondary education programs".

The House recedes.

23. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, defines the direct cost base of a tribe or tribal organization. The figure would be based upon data from the second preceding fiscal year or on a projection.

The House recedes with an amendment making technical corrections.

24. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, defines the maximum base rate allowable as either 50% or a figure to be obtained by a study done by the Secretary (see Note 28). The rate is to be published in the Federal Register.

The House recedes with an amendment setting the maximum base rate and removing the Secretary's discretion to alter it.

25. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, defines the minimum base rate allowable as either 12% or a figure to be determined by a study done by the Secretary (see Note 28). The rate is to be published in the Federal Register.

The House recedes with an amendment setting the minimum base rate and removing the Secretary's discretion to alter it.

26. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, defines "standard direct cost base" as $600,000 or an amount set by the Secretary based upon studies (see Note 28). This is to be published in the Federal Register.

The House recedes with an amendment setting the standard direct cost base and removing the Secretary's discretion to alter it.

27. Both the House and the Senate bill define isolation and multiple program adjustment factors. The definitions are similar except that the Senate allows the Secretary to modify the initial rate based upon studies and publication in the Federal Register and the Senate establishes the agency and area offices as sites from which to measure mileage.

The House recedes/The Senate recedes.

28. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, directs the Secretary to conduct certain studies to establish the elements of the administrative cost formula, and establishes certain requirements for these studies. It states that determinations in the study are to be based on what is "pragmatically possible" and "prudent". The studies are to be done and submitted to Congress no later than October 1, 1988.

The House recedes with an amendment specifying the terms to be covered by the study(ies) conducted and defining the terms. For the guidance of those who conduct this study, the Conferees cite the fact that original drafts of the legislation included the isolation factor and multiple program adjustment. However, concerns about definition, need and administration led to their deletion. Some of the problems which plagued the Conference may become apparent if the persons who undertake this portion of the study study these provisions.

29. Both provisions require an annual budget submission on the impact of the formula—Technical Differences.

The House recedes.

30. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes such sums as may be necessary for the administrative grants.

The House recedes with an amendment authorizing pro-rata reduction if funds are insufficient for full funding of these grants at the mandated amounts.

31. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, has a provision stating that the grants for administrative costs are in lieu of any other payment. It also states that changes in funds received by schools due to implementation of the formula shall be phased in over a three year period and that a tribe may elect not to be covered by this provision for those three years.

The House recedes with an amendment deleting the tribal option not to have this section apply and making the dates of phase-in consistent with the proposed date of enactment.

32. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, reserves .133% of the funds appropriated for the Indian Student Equalization Formula for national school board training, to be conducted as it was done in 1986. The agenda would be set by the school boards through their regional or national organizations. The House bill also contains a reservation of funds for each school for local school board training.

The Senate recedes.

33. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, authorizes each Bureau operated school to carry forward, at the election of the local school authority (with school board approval), up to 15% of the funds for each fiscal year beginning October 1, 1987 and after.

The Senate recedes.

34. Technical Difference—see note 20.

The House recedes.

35. Both the House bill and Senate amendment contain similar provisions relating to local procurement. The Senate amendment requires that school board approval be in advance and the House bill requires that purchases be from funds under sec. 1128 and states that the provision would be applicable for FY 1988 and after.

The House recedes with an amendment clarifying the limit of this authority and deleting the requirement that school board approval must be in advance. The Conferees intend that each school board determine the best method for reviewing the proposals and using the authority under this paragraph.

36. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, authorizes coordinated programs between local public schools and Bureau operated programs. Agreements would be negotiated between the tribe(s) and the public school and would have to be implemented by the Bureau (to the extent funds under the Indian Student Equalization Fund are available). Certain activities are specifically authorized.

The Senate recedes with an amendment which adds the Bureau school board as a party to any agreement and requires that any agreement entered into provide a benefit for the Bureau school commensurate with the burden assumed by the school, though this should not be strictly equated in terms of equal expenditures or the exchange of similar services.

37. The House bill requires that all actions under this Act be done in consultation with tribes and defines consultation as periodic and systematic meetings with tribes and organizations, with Federal Register notice of meetings being required. A list of topics would be required in the notice and information on all upcoming administrative matters would have to be provided (including the Budget). Other issues of interest could be raised, including issues in other Departments. Only those issues discussed in public meeting would meet the consultation requirement of this section. Bureau officials would also meet on request.

The Senate amendment requires that the Secretary consult with Indian tribes and tribal organizations on the "development of policy" under the Act. The Secretary or a representative shall conduct semi-annual meetings with tribes and organizations on matters relating to Indian education, with Federal Register notice being required for the meetings. At the meetings, information on all matters relating to Indian education which are being considered for change in the succeeding 6-months are to be discussed. Other issues could be raised, including issues involving other Departments. The Senate amendment also requires meetings with individual tribes on education issues affecting them and requires that the Secretary "invite active participation" in decisions affecting the schools. Planning for such meetings shall be cooperative and consultative in nature. The Senate amendment also includes a provision relating to consultation on the local level as to actions involving local schools, to be taken in conjunction with the notice required in section 1121(g) of the statute (studies).

The Senate recedes with an amendment setting out consultation as a process, to involve a total and open exchange of views, concerns and ideas, and to be conducted as between equals. The Secretary is required to give effect to the views of interested parties, unless a contrary decision is based upon information actually brought forward during the discussions, that there is a substantial reason for a contrary course of action. The Conferees intend that the requirement that the decision be based upon public information will be implemented strictly. It is included to foster an open and public discussion, the basis for any true consultation. This would have to be reduced to writing, upon receipt of a request from a Congressional Office.

38. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, allows waiver of Indian preference for both the "applicant or employe".

The House recedes.

39. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, amends the Bureau education personnel provisions to make the contract system applicable to employees currently covered by Civil Service wage grade classification. This provision would apply only to current employees if they so elect.

The House recedes.

40. The House and Senate have similar provisions requiring a study of personnel costs. The Senate amendment stipulates that public schools used for comparison shall be comparable in four respects and that the final report contain comparisons of certification and length of work year and work day, in addition to the other, common requirements.

The House recedes with an amendment setting the date for submission of the study.

41. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, stipulates that the costs for the study (other than personnel expenses) shall come from the General Administrative account. The Senate amendment also authorizes the Secretary to conduct such other personnel compensation and recruitment studies as are desirable.

The House recedes.

42. The House bill defines the term "educational personnel". The Senate amendment defines the terms "Secretary" and "Bureau".

The House recedes.

43. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, amends the rate provision of the Bureau's education personnel section to require that the salaries paid shall be comparable to teachers of similar professional training and experience serving comparable students in comparable public schools, with certain adjustments.

The House recedes with an amendment which requires the Secretary to either 1) use the overseas pay schedules used by the Department of Defense, or 2) negotiate with the exclusive collective bargaining agent of the employes. Unless the Secretary chooses to negotiate within the allotted time, the Department of Defense pay schedules (with the given caveats) would be automatically effective. Changes would be distributed equally over a three-year "phase-in" period and there are other administrative provisions relating to election by current employes and furloughs. The Conferees intend that all decisions on furloughs be made locally, not dictated by any division or office at a higher level.

The Conferees wish to make it clear that this provision applies to setting wage rates. The Bureau is to retain its administrative practices which relate to promotions, the setting of initial wages, and other issues, using merit, education, experience and length of services. The Conferees specifically intend that dormitory counselors, also referred to as home-living specialists, come under this provision.

44. The House bill mandates that in those instances where the Assistant Secretary determines there is a disparity in compensation which affects the recruitment and retention capability of a school to an extent where services are impaired, the Assistant Secretary shall (subject to school board approval) give the supervisor authority to use the 25% differential currently found in statute. Any time there is a 5% disparity in compensation (as determined by the studies—see Note 40), the authority for the differential would be automatically given to the local school supervisor. Each year, the Assistant Secretary shall submit, as part of the Budget submission, a report on all requests for this authority and the determinations on such requests, and all positions contracted under such provisions.

The Senate amendment amends section 1131 of the Act and states that upon the request of the local school board, the Secretary shall grant the supervisor the authority to provide one or more post differentials, (allowed under current law) unless the Secretary determines for "clear and convincing reasons" (in writing) that the requested differential is not needed. A school board request shall be viewed as approved, unless denied in 60 days. The Secretary or school supervisor is authorized to discontinue or reduce the differential at the beginning of a school year either at the request of the school board or if (subject to the same limitations) a finding is made that it is no longer necessary. A report similar to the House bill provision is required by February 1 of each year.

The House recedes.

45. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes $15 million for 1989 and each succeeding fiscal year for grants for programs of early childhood education to serve children under 6, and their parents. Grants would be made for a range of stipulated activities and distributed to tribes of more than 500 members based upon a formula based on a tribal percentage of the national eligible Indian population under age six. Grantees are to provide instruction in tribal language, art and culture and grants are to be coordinated with other programs and to have periodic assessments. Amounts for administrative costs are to be provided from the funds authorized and appropriated under this section.

The House recedes with an amendment clarifying that the funds for these grants are to be used to coordinate resources provided under other programs or to "fill in the gaps" in services provided or eligible populations served by the other programs. Such services would not be subject to the same limits on eligibility of the child or family, or on services to be offered, found in other programs. The specific activities would be spelled out during the application process. The amendment also clarifies that a consortium to tribes, which has an aggregate of more than 500 eligible members, may qualify. This will allow participation in the program of tribes with fewer members.

46. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes definitions for "Bureau funded school", "Bureau school" and "contract school", which would be applicable to all provisions of Title XI of P.L. 95-561.

The House recedes.

47. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, provides that in any fiscal year in which a sequestration order (under the Gramm-Rudman provisions) reduces the funds under section 1128 of the statute (Indian Student Equalization Formula) by more than 5%, the Secretary would be authorized to waive the provisions of section 1121 pertaining to notice and study prior to closure and consolidation and would be authorized to use the funds otherwise used in such closed or consolidated programs in other Bureau funded schools.

The House recedes with an amendment raising the trigger to a 7% sequestration and clarifying that the reduction must be based upon a 7% reduction in the previous year's funding level. This means that this provision may not go into effect if the current Fiscal Year amount being reduced shows a substantial increase from the previous year's funding level.

48. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes such sums as may be necessary for grants to establish tribal departments of education, which shall, among other duties, coordinate all education programs (Federal and other), and develop education codes, standards and policies. No terms other than those stipulated in the statute could be placed on the grants.

The House recedes with an amendment setting out a priority to be given to applications containing certain factors. The Conferees intend that the provision relating to the administration of education contracts by the Tribal department of education not be interpreted as requiring a single contract for elementary and secondary education programs (funded under Title XI of P.L. 95-561) or the administration of a tribally controlled community college by the department of education. As is currently the case, this decision remains one totally within the discretion of the tribal governing body. Specifically, the Conferees intended this provision to apply to Johnson-O'Malley and Higher Education grants, where the tribe contracts these programs, and other education grants for which tribe may be eligible.

49. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, directs the Secretary of Interior to make a study of the distribution of funds under the Johnson-O'Malley Act and report to Congress on legislation which would guarantee its most "effective and equitable distribution".

The Senate recedes.

50. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, amends the current statutory provisions on attendance areas to state that when there are two or more Bureau funded schools on a reservation, the relevant school boards, at the direction of the tribal governing body, may establish the attendance areas for the schools involved.

The House recedes.

PART B—TRIBAL SCHOOLS GRANT AUTHORITY

51. Technical Difference—The House and Senate have different titles.

The House recedes.

52. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, contains a statement on the use of funds and the need to submit an application.

The House recedes.

53. Technical differences—drafting differences between the House and Senate version.

The House recedes.

54. The House bill combines operation and maintenance funds into the single grant where the school has requested and receives them. The Senate amendment does not contain the limitation.

The Senate recedes.

55. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, stipulates that no more than one grant under this program may be made with respect to any Indian tribe for each fiscal year.

The House recedes with an amendment clarifying that grants are not limited to one per tribe. The Conferees intend that the decision to have a single grant for all school programs, separate grants for "stand-alone" schools or a combination of these arrangements be made in Tribal Council Chambers, not on Capitol Hill.

56. The House bill says that a multisite grantee shall spend no less than 90% of the funds generated by each site, or $400,000 (whichever is least) at the site which generates the funds. The Senate requires that not less than 90% of the funds generated by a site be spent on-site.

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

57. Technical differences—see Note 62 and 70.

The House recedes.

58. Similar provisions, but the Senate bill does not include the requirement that if the Secretary takes a retrocession of a program which has had a grant, the Bureau shall provide services at no less than the level planned for by the grantee. (See note 70.)

The House recedes/The Senate recedes.

59. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes a provision for the Secretary to transfer to a tribe a school, if the Secretary determines that the school is eligible for assistance under this part.

The House recedes.

60. Technical differences.

The House recedes/The Senate recedes.

61. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, provides an option to an applicant on which regulations and guidelines shall be used to review an application for expansion which was submitted prior to the date of enactment.

The Senate recedes with an amendment incorporating the House provision relating to the review of applications for expansion within section 5104, see note 8.

62. Technical Differences—see note 57

The House recedes/The Senate recedes.

63. Technical Differences (see notes 72 and 73)—The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, also provides for the transfer of a school where requested.

The House recedes/The Senate recedes.

64. Technical Differences (see notes 72 and 73).

The House recedes/The Senate recedes. The Conferees wish to make plain that submission of the information within the control of the applicant constitutes a sufficient application, see comment under note 8.

65. The House and Senate have similar provisions (see note 71). The Senate amendment states that expansions of more than two grades must wait a statutory period of time. (See also note 8 on Senate provisions relating to new school regulations.)

The House recedes/The Senate recedes.

66. Technical Difference—see notes 72 and 73.

The House recedes.

67. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, requires that all applications be filed at the Agency Office, Area Office, or Office of the Director of Indian Education Programs, at that officer's discretion and that statutory timelines shall run from date of receipt at the designated office.

The Senate recedes with an amendment stipulating the officers to receive the applications, amendments to applications or required reports.

68. Technical differences.

The House recedes/The Senate recedes.

69. The House and Senate have similar provisions, except: the Senate provision uses the term "ensuring the credits received by students", while the House uses the term "showing the credits received by students"; the Senate conditions tribal accreditation upon that accreditation "being accepted by a generally recognized regional or State accreditation agency"; The Senate uses the term "impartial evaluator", while the House uses the term "outside evaluator"; and the Senate uses the term "tribal governing body", while the House uses the term "tribal authority".

The House recedes/The Senate recedes, making technical clarifications, requiring that tribal standards be accepted by a generally recognized regional or State accreditation agency, and requiring that the applicable tribe(s) receive the required reports and notice of any audit exceptions.

The Conferees wish to emphasize that the statute is worded to require the grantee to submit the reports and the Secretary to register the receipt of the required reports. There is no authority for the Secretary to review or approve the reports. It has been just this process of review which has been the most intrusive method used by the Bureau for retaining effective control or veto power over locally controlled schools.

70. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, states that the grants under this Act may not be terminated, modified, suspended or reduced for the convenience of the administering agency. (Also see note 58.)

The Senate recedes. The theory of "administrative convenience", as a grounds for termination, was first used by the Bureau in 1984 with respect to two contracts with the Navajo Community College. The terminations were challenged in the Interior Board of Contract Appeals, which reversed the Bureau's terminations (IBCA Opinion Number 1834). The Bureau, however, has never specifically stipulated that it has reversed its position that "administrative convenience" is a proper ground for termination or modification. The Conferees specifically have prohibited its use, at least insofar as these grants are concerned, and do not intend that their actions signal any acceptance of the theory with respect to any other grant, contract or agreement.

71. Technical differences—See note 65.

The Senate recedes.

72. Technical differences—see note 63.

The House recedes/The Senate recedes. The Conferees intend that the requirement for tribal governing body approval apply to all applications received, including those submitted by any tribal organization.

73. Technical difference—see note 63.

The House recedes.

74. The House and Senate have similar provisions, with these exceptions: The House specifically references transportation as in the grant. The Senate contains language relieving schools with grants from all statutory requirements pertaining to Chapter I and Handicapped flow-through moneys, while the House relieves schools with grants from extra-legal requirements imposed by the Bureau, and specifically requires that the programs required by the basic legislation be carried out.

The Senate recedes with an amendment stipulating that while monies received from the Bureau pursuant to setasides under other Federal authorities are to be included in the simple grant under this provision, an amount no less than the amount received under each separate authority must be spent on programs specifically authorized under that authority and specified in the application(s) submitted by the school for participation in each program.

75. Technical difference—see note 77.

The House recedes.

76. Technical difference

The House recedes.

77. Technical difference—see note 75.

The House recedes.

78. The House provisions puts no time limit on a current contractor's right to elect to have a grant, but states that it shall not start until 60 days after the election or October 1 of the FY following the FY in which the election was made, whichever is later. The Senate provision requires a contractor to elect to be covered within 120 days of date of enactment and to make the election in such manner and at such time as the Secretary shall prescribe.

The Senate recedes.

79. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, provides that no funds provided under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act shall be spent for activities for which funds have been received under this Act.

The House recedes.

80. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, states that regulations prescribed under this Act shall not have the standing of a Federal statute for the purposes of judicial review.

The Senate recedes.

81. The House and the Senate have similar provisions, except that the Senate includes a definition of "Bureau".

The House recedes.

PART C—INDIAN EDUCATION ACT

82. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, recodifies the parts of the Indian Education Act, currently found in four statutes. With the noted exceptions below, the provisions are substantively the same as are found in current law.

The House recedes.

83. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes a new definition—"eligible Indian children".

The House recedes.

84. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, changes "by such State" to "of such State".

The House recedes with an amendment changing "of" to "by", thus retaining current law.

85. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, changes "average daily enrollment" to "average daily attendance".

The House recedes.

86. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, changes "planning for and taking other steps leading to the development of" to "planning and development".

The House recedes.

87. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, deletes the term "special" from the phrase "special regulations".

The House recedes.

88. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, deletes the phrase "specially designed to meet the special educational or culturally related academic needs, or both", as it pertains to equipment.

The House recedes.

89. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, changes "schools eligible for funding under" to "schools receiving funds under".

The House recedes with an amendment retaining current law.

90. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, deletes the phrase "(including persons acting in loco parentis other than school administrators or officials)". See definitions, note 119.

The House recedes.

91. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, deletes the same phrase as in note 90. See note 119.

The House recedes.

92. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires that each application include a form establishing the eligibility for each Indian student counted.

The House recedes.

93. The Senate amendment sets out specific information to be requested on the form establishing eligibility. The provisions are the same as current law, except that the Senate uses the term "child" instead of "applicant" and, with relation to tribal enrollment numbers, "if applicable" instead of "where applicable".

The House bill changes the current language to state that the forms shall be used only for collecting statistical information, not for establishing eligibility.

The House recedes. The Conferees specifically reference the comment at note 95. The term "if applicable" has been changed to "if readily available". Other proofs or evidence would be equally acceptable for these students.

94. The Senate amendment changes the phrase "construed as changing or restricting the applicable eligibility definition" to "construed as affecting the definition".

The House bill adds the statement that failure to provide any information relating to the form shall have no bearing on eligibility.

The House recedes.

95. The Senate amendment states that the criteria for establishing eligibility for the program shall be the same as those used in the 1985-1986 academic year.

The House bill states that the determination of eligibility shall vest solely with the local educational agency and the parent committee. They shall establish local written guidelines for proof and determinations shall be based upon a parent committee review of such evidence as the parent may submit. A positive determination could be reviewed by the local education agency and overruled. The Secretary would not review.

The House recedes with an amendment which accepts the Senate's provision on prohibiting change, by regulation or practice, in the proof of eligibility forms and standards. These forms and standards are to remain as they were in the 1985-1986 academic year. Specifically, the Conferees intend that this language preclude 1) Departmental efforts to restrict or catalogue the proofs of eligibility which may be accepted, and 2) efforts to require a tribal enrollment number or other numerical identifier in the instances where a tribe has such rolls. Specific language to this effect has been included. The House amendment also specifies that all audits are to based upon the policies and practices established by, or pursuant to instructions received from, the Office of Indian Education programs. The Conferees intend to preclude separate policy or statutory interpretations being made by the Office of the Inspector General or any other Division. As a remedy to one such instance, the amendment includes language "forgiving" recent audit exceptions based upon the submission of applications for Indian Education Act, Part A, funds of counts based on projected, tentative or incomplete Form 506 eligibility forms. Such a count, on a February submission, has a sound basis in practice and practicability. Finally, the amendment specifically sets into legislation the practice of a "good-faith" effort to comply with the eligibility proof requirement. Such an effort, predicated upon a showing that a good faith effort has been made to otbain the required information, which is in the control of others, is sufficient to qualify the student. It should be noted that no time limit or requirement for periodic renewal is included or within the intent of this provision.

96. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, changes the maintenance of effort provision to require 90% m.o.e., with the provision for ratable reduction for any year in which m.o.e. falls below 90% and a Secretarial waiver for "precipitous and unforeseen decline in the agency's financial resources".

The House recedes with an amendment duplicating the maintenance of effort provision in Chapter I of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act.

97. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, deletes the term "and stimulate them" after assist.

The House recedes.

98. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, adds a provision for a tribal division of education grants—to receive a 10% setaside of funds under this section (see note 104)

The House recedes.

99. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, adds a provision for grants to consortia of tribes, local educational agencies and institutions of higher education to institute programs to encourage Indian students to go on to higher education and to prevent drop-outs.

The Senate recedes.

100. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, changes "or" to "and".

The House recedes.

101. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, adds the term "adults" to "Indian children".

The House recedes. The Conferees, by adding the term "adult", do not intend to alter the current activities drastically. Evaluations of programs providing services to elementary and secondary programs and children are still to receive priority consideration.

102. Technical Difference

The House recedes.

103. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, changes "make adequate provision for" to "provide for".

The House recedes.

104. The Senate amendment deletes current specific authorization for the regional assistance centers and the limit that no more than 15% of the funds for such centers could go to state educational agencies.

The House reserves 10% of the funds for activities under subsection (c) to be spent under (c)(3).

The House recedes with an amendment retaining the current authorization for the regional resource centers.

105. The Senate amendment extends the current authorization of $2,000,000 per FY through FY 1993.

The House authorizes such sums as may be necessary for the same period.

The Senate recedes.

106. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, adds the phrase "to be necessary" to the Secretary's determination of the amount to be paid to an institution.

The House recedes. The Conferees direct the Secretary to review current practices with respect to determining eligibility for Fellowships. The Department has, through its application process, restricted the access of non-reservation based and non-Federally recognized Indians to this program. The definition for this activity is the same as for the rest of the Act, and is inclusive, not exclusive. Indian students, particularly those who have been adopted, must not be placed under impossible requirements or at a disadvantage.

107. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, adds a requirement that the Secretary provide notice no less than 45 days before the commencement of an academic term of the assistance to be provided.

The House recedes.

108. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, adds a new program for the establishment of two centers for gifted and talented students at Sinte Gleska College and Navajo Community College. Grants would be made to these entities and the American Indian Higher Education Consortium for the design of demonstration projects for a number of purposes. Subgrants could be made with the Children's Television Workshop. Grantees would be encouraged to work cooperatively as a national network. $3,000,000 per FY is authorized through 1993.

The House recedes with an amendment deleting the specifically named schools and substituting as eligible to compete all fully accredited tribally controlled community colleges which are eligible to receive funds under P.L. 95-471. Two such grants are to be made.

The amendment also contains provisions from Part D of Title VIII of the House passed bill H.R. 5, the Model Schools Act. Drafted and sponsored by Mr. Richardson of New Mexico, these provisions direct the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, to designate 5 schools nationwide for the development of programs for gifted and talented students and curricula and teacher training materials. Specific activities are set forth, as are requirements for coordination with the tribally controlled community colleges designated by these sections. The Conferees intend that the colleges supply research and technical assistance to the field in general and the model schools in particular, that the model schools, in cooperation with the colleges, define needs and develop program, and that the colleges evaluate the programs and aid in their dissemination.

Finally the amendment stipulates that the first activity to be funded under this provision should be the development of the definition to be used in implementing the new Indian Student Equalization Formula factor for gifted and talented students included in section 5107 this Act. The report on this grant is to be directly submitted to the Secretaries of Education and Interior and to the Congress.

109. Technical difference.

The House recedes.

110. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, deletes general statement of activities allowed.

The House recedes.

111. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, changes the term "promulgated" to "prescribed", with reference to regulations.

The House recedes.

112. The Senate amendment authorizes such sums as may be necessary for 1989 and the 4 succeeding Fiscal Years.

The House bill authorizes $8 million for FY 1988 and such sums as may be necessary through FY 1993.

The House recedes.

113. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, establishes an Office of Indian Education reporting directly to the Secretary of Education.

The House recedes with an amendment stipulating that the Director is to report directly to the Assistant Secretary for Elementary and Secondary Education giving new authorities and responsibilities to the Director for the Office of Indian Education, placing him at the forefront of the Department's efforts for Indian education. The Conferees are disturbed with reports of employes being given duties and tasks unrelated to their functions within the Office, with the refusal of needed overtime for work on Indian Education matters (particularly when overtime is abundantly available for other matters) and with reports leading to a general opinion that the Department has not shown proper interest in, or for, this program. More drastic action was contemplated, but rejected, for now. However, the Conferees are committed to monitoring this situation closely.

The amendment also retains current law relating to the role of the National Advisory Council on Indian Education in choosing the Director.

114. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, establishes Indian preference in the Office of Indian Education.

The House recedes with an amendment stipulating that all professional staff within the Office of Indian Education must have experience in Indian education programs. The definition of "Indian" to be used for this provision is the same as the one for all other purposes of this Act, found at section 5351(4). The amendment also creates an Indian preference for all personnel actions within the Office, to be administered in the same fashion as "veterans' preference" laws are administered. The Conferees also direct the Secretary to develop career goals and training opportunities for these and other qualified Indian employes.

As a first step to foster Indian preference, the amendment also includes a provision to give current non-Indian employes of the Office a one-time preference in moving to other positions within the Department for which they are qualified. Such a move must be voluntary. The Conferees intend that this provision be administered in concert and at the same time as the other provisions in this section.

115. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, deletes "Alaskan Natives" from specific eligibility to sit on the N.A.C.I.E. The Conferees note that the definition of Indian for the program includes Alaskan Natives.

The House recedes. The Conferees do not intend that this be interpreted as a change from current policy or practice.

116. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes an authorization for the administrative provisions.

The House recedes.

117. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes a number of new definitions for the program, including:

(1) adult—similar to that in the Adult Education Act—sec. 303;

(2) adult education—similar to that in the Adult Education Act, however, adds caveat that program is for adults "who are not enrolled in secondary school";

(3) free public education—similar to the provision for the E.S.E.A. and the E.C.I.A., but deletes the phrase "except that such term does not include any education provided beyond grade 12";

(4) local educational agency; and

(5) Secretary.

The House recedes.

117(a). The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, amends the definition of Indian to delete the phrase "which regulations shall further define the term 'Indian' from the Secretary's rulemaking authority.

The House recedes.

118. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes in the term local educational agency schools operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The House recedes with an amendment stipulating that existing programs receiving Title IV grants will be held harmless at the Fiscal Year 1988 per student formula grant amount plus an inflation factor of 2%. All other monies appropriated above that amount will be used to bring the Bureau of Indian Affairs schools into the formula program. Once appropriations are sufficient to bring all programs to the same level, this hold harmless will no longer apply and all eligible grantees will be treated the same. The Conferees are in full agreement on the equity of including B.I.A. operated schools in the Title IV program and agree to work with their respective Appropriations Committees to see that the necessary funding is made available in Fiscal Year 1989. The Conferees emphasize that students attending BIA schools should receive the same services that are now available to Indian students in public and contract schools and that this hold harmless was deemed necessary only because the program has received significant reductions in the last decade. A further reduction in program dollars of 8 or 9 percent would likely cause some programs to cease operating.

119. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes a caveat that the term "parent" includes those acting in loco parentis (see notes 90 and 91).

The House recedes.

120. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, repeals the current provisions of the Indian Education Act of 1972.

The House recedes.

PART D—NATIVE AMERICAN SCHOOLS

121. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, establishes a Native American School Act.

The House recedes. The essence of this provision, authored by Mr. Richardson of New Mexico, has been moved under the Indian Education Act.

122. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, includes definitions for the Act.

The House recedes.

123. The House bill but not the Senate amendment, authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to consult with Indian tribes concerning the establishment or recognition of five Native American Indian schools. Tribes may petition for the creation of such schools and schools currently funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs may be recognized. Each school so recognized will be established as a separate Federal corporation and organized according to the requirements of this Act.

The House recedes.

124. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, requires that each Native American Indian School have a Board of Directors composed according to the Act. The Act also contains provisions governing the appointment of the Board, terms, compensation, officers, meetings, and other administrative matters. The Board is to formulate the policy and direct the management of the school.

The House recedes.

125. The House bill but not the Senate amendment, sets out the general powers of the Board.

The House recedes.

126. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, establishes the position of Superintendent of the School, who shall carry out the policies and functions of the School and have authority over personnel and activities. Compensation is set at that of a GS-15.

The House recedes.

127. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, sets out that staff of the school would be exempt from Civil Service and sets out rules for establishment of a personnel system including compensation, leave, resolution of disputes and disciplinary issues and changeover to the new system.

The House recedes.

128. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, sets out the functions of the school which include: basic instruction, programs for gifted and talented and students with special needs, college preparation and programs which culminate in the completion of the program of studies for elementary and secondary schools.

The House recedes.

129. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, establishes Indian preference in hiring, employment, and contracts, grants and fellowships.

The House recedes.

130. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, sets forth the nonprofit and nonpolitical status of such a school.

The House recedes.

131. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, enumerates statutes which shall have specific applicability to the activities of the school and states that all Federal criminal laws on larceny, embezzlement and conversion of property shall apply.

The House recedes.

132. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, sets out requirements for the establishment of an endowment program for a school under this Act.

The House recedes.

133. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, authorizes the Secretary to provide funds for these schools in accordance with current applicable statute and other Federal programs, states that such schools are eligible for funding under the Indian Education Act and authorizes the Secretary to expend such sums as may be necessary to ensure the "orderly establishment" of such schools.

The House recedes.

PART E—NATIVE HAWAIIAN PROGRAMS

134. The House and Senate bill have similar provisions. However, the House includes specific mention of "learning disabled, educably retarded . . . and other such students" (in addition to the term "handicapped").

The Senate recedes.

135. Technical difference—the Senate throughout refers to "Act", the House refers to "title"—difference in drafting.

The Senate recedes.

136. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, adds "implementation of faculty development programs for the improvement and matriculation of Native Hawaiian Students" to the activities authorized under the demonstration grant program.

The House recedes.

137. The Senate amendment directs the Secretary of Education to establish a Native Hawaiian Gifted and Talented Center at the University of Hawaii at Hilo, specifically references the University of Hawaii at Hilo and the Kamehameha Schools/Bernice Pauahi Bishop Estate as an eligible contractor for demonstration program contracts and states that contractors may subcontract with the Children's Television Workshop. It also includes the needs of the families of gifted and talented as to be addressed.

The House bill directs the Secretary to make contracts with the State of Hawaii, including its junior or community colleges, for such activities.

The House recedes with an amendment stating that the initial grant or contract shall, subject to appropriations and satisfactory performance, be for a term of three years and shall be made to the University of Hawaii at Hilo, with subsequent grants or contracts being to a four year, fully accredited public institution of higher education.

138. The Senate amendment directs demonstration projects be made "with attention to the emotional and psychosocial needs" of gifted and talented students and their families.

The House bill gives a priority to early identification of such students.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment. The Conferees wish to explain the use of the term "psychosocial". Gifted and talented children may respond to environmental situations in a way that is different from other children, which can create psychological problems on the part of the gifted and talented child. Problems of this nature can prevent a child from reaching his or her potential if they are not recognized and treated.

139. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, adds "psychosocial and developmental activities" to authorized activities, and specifically mentions "including, but not limited to" demonstrating and exploring the use of the Native Hawaiian language and exposure to Native Hawaiian cultural conditions".

The House recedes. See note 138.

140. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes leadership programs to replicate successful programs to "other Native American peoples".

The House recedes.

141. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes families.

The House recedes with an amendment. See note 138.

142. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, directs the Secretary to facilitate the establishment of a national network of Native Hawaiian Gifted and Talented Centers, whose information will be readily available for the educational community at large.

The House recedes.

143. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, limits administrative costs to not more than 10% of the funds appropriated.

The Senate recedes with an amendment deleting the term "10 percent" and substituting in lieu thereof "7 percent".

144. Similar provisions—different language for handicaps.

The Senate recedes.

145. Similar provisions. The Senate amendment requires that activities be consistent with Part B of the Education of the Handicapped Act and that activities "hold reasonable promise of improving the provision of special education and related services", while the House bill uses the phrases "hold reasonable promise of making substantial progress toward meeting the educational needs". Different definitions for handicapped.

The House recedes.

TRIBAL COLLEGES AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

146. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, amends the Navajo Community College Act to specifically list the expenses to be included in the annual computation by the Secretary of the amount authorized to be paid by the Federal government to the Navajo Community College for programs.

The House recedes.

147. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, amends the Tribally Controlled Community Colleges Act of 1978 and the Navajo Community College Act to require the Secretary to use the method of fund disbursement used in FY 1987 in making payments to those schools, and states that interest earned on such funds shall be the property of the College and shall not be earned on such funds shall be the property of the College and shall not be taken into account when determining any Federal payments of eligibility.

The House recedes with an amendment prohibiting the accumulation of the funds so obtained.

148. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, specifically amends the Navajo Community College Act to provide authority for funding operations and maintenance costs, costs for major capital improvements and for other purposes. Also exempts any interest earned on any Federal payments from any computations of eligibility or amount to which the school is entitled under any Federal program. Funds must be invested in Federal bonds.

This note is repetitious and a mistake.

149. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, amends the Navajo Community College Act and the Tribally Controlled Community Colleges Act to allow funds paid to a school under these Acts to be used as matching funds for other Federal programs.

The House recedes.

150. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, limits the ability of the Secretary to remove from the general assistance rolls any student at a tribally controlled community college or other institution of higher education. Limits the funds which can be considered in computation of general assistance. The provision does not amend any requirement of general assistance.

The House recedes with an amendment allowing Adult Vocational Education funds to be used for matching purposes, in the same manner and to the same extent, as funds under the Tribally Controlled Community Colleges Act.

151. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes the Secretary to permit the use of Federal facilities, land and equipment by tribal, student and other non-Federal organizations, to the extent it does not interfere with their purpose. User fees may be charged and credited to the appropriations or fund from which any expenses incurred were paid. This authority is in addition to any other authority.

The House recedes with an amendment.

152. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes Congressional findings supporting a White House Conference on Indian Education.

The House recedes.

153. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, directs the President to call a Conference no earlier than Sept. 1, 1989 and no later than Sept. 30, 1991. The purpose of the Conference is to consider the feasibility of establishing an independent Board of Indian Education and to make other recommendations for the improvement of Indian education programs.

The House recedes.

154. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, sets out the composition of representatives for the Conference, including tribal, B.I.A., education, and other representatives with special expertise. The President, the Speaker and the President pro-tem shall each choose ⅓ of the participants. ¼ shall be currently active educators from Indian reservations, ¼ educators from urban areas with large Indian populations, ¼ Federal and tribal officials, and ¼ Indians (including non-recognized Tribes).

The House recedes.

155. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes administrative provisions for the Conference, including the assignment of personnel, establishment of a Task Force to coordinate the Conference, choice of a Task Force Director and the provision of Federal cooperation and coordination for support. The activities of the Task Force are listed, including the provision of grants to States and tribes to allow them to prepare for, and provide for the preparation of, such materials as may be necessary.

The House recedes with an amendment clarifying that the appointees must have experience in Indian education programs, not just issues, and stipulating that at least one person appointed by the Secretary of the Interior must be experienced in dealing with the Congress and tribes and outside organizations. This is to facilitate exchanges between all parties interested in this Conference and recognizes the specialized knowledge needed for this task. It is also strongly recommended that the Secretaries choose people who have worked with personnel and programs within the other Department.

156. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, contains provisions on the report and the recommendations of the Conference, to be submitted to the President, and then transmitted, along with Presidential comment, to Congress.

The House recedes.

157. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, establishes an Advisory Board to assist and advise the Task Force on the conference. The makeup of the Advisory Board is set, with the input of the Indian community and the control of the President, the Speaker and the President pro-tem. Other administrative provisions relating to compensation are set out.

The House recedes.

158. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes the Task Force to accept gifts for immediate disbursement in support of the conference.

The House recedes.

159. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes such sums as may be necessary for the conference for FYs 1988, 1989 and 1990.

The House recedes.

TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS STUDIES

The conferees have agreed to create a separate section in the Hawkins-Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988 which highlights the numerous research and evaluation studies requested by Congress. The intent is to clearly signal to the professional research and evaluation community that Congress considers the contribution of research as critical not only during the reauthorization proceedings but also throughout the period during which the legislation is in effect.

Policy decisions by the Congress depend upon the latest scientifically derived data together with a thorough understanding of research and evaluation findings. The conferees want to emphasize that they intend to take a more active oversight role and to work with the Department of Education in monitoring these research and evaluation studies.

Federal requirements for research, studies and reports are generally included; requirements for similar activities at the State and local level, except when they are to result in a Federal report, have been excluded. Requirements for pilot or demonstration projects, evaluations, and development or dissemination activities have been excluded, except when they are to result in a Federal report. The National Assessment of Educational Progress requirement for the assessment of student performance in specific subject areas, as revised by the Senate, has been excluded because the program intent appears to be similar to current law; other House and Senate provisions for the National Assessment have been included.

Effective Schools Study: The conferees have agreed that the data collection for this study should include, but not be limited to the following guidelines:

I. Characteristics of students in effective schools programs:

(1) Sex.

(2) Race/ethnicity.

(3) Age.

(4) Limited English speaking.

(5) Receiving services for limited English speaking.

(6) Public assistance, as measured by receipt of a free or reduced lunch program.

(7) Enrollment in Chapter 1 program.

(8) Receiving special education services for the handicapped (P.L. 94-142).

Most of these data elements are customarily collected by the schools and therefore should not represent an appreciable burden.

II. School characteristics:

(1) Staff numbers (professional/support).

(2) Teacher characteristics:

(a) Sex.

(b) Race/ethnicity.

(c) Years of teaching experience.

(d) Education (degree).

(e) Salaries.

(f) Teacher turnover.

(3) Expenditures on staff development.

(4) Student/Teacher ratio.

(5) Student turnover (average enrollment length).

(6) Expenditures per pupil.

(7) Existence of school improvement programs in addition to effective schools programs, e.g., State mandated curriculum changes, mentor teacher programs, remedial programs.

(8) Existence of gifted and talented programs.

Schools generally have such data, although some may not have analyzed them. All the items are desirable, but if a few are too costly or difficult to obtain they should not be required by the Secretary of Education.

III. Program description:

(1) Program objectives.

(2) Amount of funding.

(3) Activities.

(4) Major problems encountered.

(5) Length of program period.

(6) Evaluation measures.

IV. Program outcomes:

(1) Intermediate outcomes (school climate measures):

(a) Hours of instruction.

(b) Tardiness.

(c) Student absenteeism/attendance.

(d) Teacher absenteeism/attendance.

(e) Number of suspensions.

(f) Parent satisfaction.

(g) Staff satisfaction.

(h) Student satisfaction.

(2) Student achievement outcomes.

(a) Test scores on at least reading and mathematics at given grade levels and for individual students over time (i.e., cross-sectional and longitudinal information). Such scores should be provided by race/ethnicity, socioeconomic status, and special program status (e.g., Chapter 1):

(i) Standardized norm-referenced tests (tests which allow comparison of local school achievement scores to the national norm at various grade levels). Students should be traced for a minimum of two years.

(ii) Standardized criterion-referenced tests (tests which all the youth are expected to pass).

(b) College entrance examinations results, such as for the Scholastic Aptitude Test and American College Testing.

(c) Student promotion/retention.

(d) Percent of youth going to college:

(i) 4-year schools.

(ii) 2-year schools.

(e) School completion rates.

(f) School dropout rates at various grades.

(g) Return rates of dropouts.

Items (b) through (g) should be separately reported by race/ethnicity.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

1. The House bill differs from the Senate amendment in that it indicates of chapter 1 of this Act.

The Senate amendment indicates of chapter 1 of title I of this Act.

The House recedes.

2. The House bill differs from the Senate amendment in that it indicates only to the extent OR in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts.

The Senate amendment indicates only to the extent AND in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts.

The Senate recedes.

3. The House bill indicates that this Act shall take effect October 1, 1987.

The Senate amendment indicates that this Act shall take effect October 1, 1988. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes a "special rules" provision.

The House recedes with an amendment making the effective date July 1, 1988.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, as I mentioned on the floor during consideration of S. 373 by the full Senate, the adoption of the amendment to the Communications Act of 1934 offered by Senator HELMS is obviously severable from the other provisions of the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988 should court actions be brought concerning the Helms amendment.

Furthermore, we included language in the original Senate committee report that if any provisions of S. 373 or application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the legislation and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby. This language would most certainly hold for H.R. 5.

To my mind, our Federal investment in elementary and secondary education is a critical investment in the future well-being of our economy and our society. I would urge my colleagues to swiftly approve this legislation so that we may continue to lay the groundwork for the future.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise to underscore my strong support for the legislation before us today.

I am especially pleased that this legislation has been named in part after my long-time friend and colleague Senator STAFFORD. Senator STAFFORD's public service career is long and distinguished: deputy attorney general and attorney general of Vermont, Lieutenant Governor and Governor of Vermont and a Member of the House of Representatives. For the last 18 years, however, he has been a Member of this body. Like all of us who have served with him, I value Senator STAFFORD's wisdom and counsel on the full range of issues that come before the Senate. It is, however, his work on education and environmental issues that will be his greatest legacy. The Washington Post praised Senator STAFFORD's contribution when the Senate approved S. 373, and I would like to have that editorial included as part of my remarks. I wish Senator STAFFORD a happy and fulfilling retirement, but I am sorry to see him leave the Senate.

Mr. President, one of Senator STAFFORD's legacies is that there is no dispute that a solid education system is essential for this country's economic growth and social progress. While most investment in education comes from the State and local levels, the Federal Government has an important leadership role to play. This role includes ensuring that the door to a quality education is open to everyone, and guaranteeing that educationally and economically disadvantaged children get the extra help they need. The Federal role also includes sponsoring efforts to measure the Nation's progress, so that we know how we are doing and where we need to improve. And it encompasses encouraging innovation of promising new ideas, and dissemination of proven programs.

The legislation we are considering today fulfills each of these roles. It contains the reauthorization of over a dozen major Federal education programs affecting elementary and secondary school students. It also authorizes some new creative and important education programs for the first time.

I would like to comment on a few of the programs in particular.

THE FUND FOR THE IMPROVEMENT AND REFORM OF SCHOOLS AND TEACHING

This bill includes my proposal to create a fund for the improvement and reform of schools and teaching [FIRST]. We know that some of the best ideas for educational reform come from the teachers and school building administrators who deal with success and failure on a daily basis. The Federal Government has an innovative grant-making organization in postsecondary education—the fund for the improvement of postsecondary education [FIPSE]. With this bill, we will establish a companion fund to sponsor innovative and reform-oriented projects to improve elementary and secondary education.

This fund will make small, action-oriented grants to States, local school districts and individual schools to provide the risk capital needed to launch locally designed projects that meet local education needs. In making awards, priority is to be given to projects that benefit schools with below-average performance and that use incentives to accomplish specific goals—such as decreasing the dropout rate or improving test scores. The Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee heard testimony on October 5, 1987, about the use of incentives in education. The use of incentives and rewards has been tested by some school districts with promising results.

This proposal will provide funds to try these programs more widely.

BILINGUAL EDUCATION

H.R. 5 combines the best provisions of the House and Senate bills regarding bilingual education. The legislation incorporates numerous technical changes contained in the House bill. These changes are designed to overcome problems—some inherent in the statute, others associated with the Department of Education's administration of the program—which detract from the program's effectiveness.

Inclusion of the Senate bill's new funding reservations in H.R. 5 accommodates the Education Department's quest for greater funding flexibility without mandating increased spending for monolingual instructional programs. This enhanced funding flexibility should be exercised in a responsible fashion, and I urge both the Department of Education and my colleagues on the Senate and House Appropriations Committees to allocate nonreserved funds to those part A programs which, on the basis of objective program evaluation and research data, are shown to be most effective in helping limited-English-proficient students achieve academic success. In this regard, I am troubled by the fact that the Department of Education currently provides only two grants, amounting to less than one-quarter of 1 percent of all part A grant funds, for two-way developmental bilingual education programs. Locally funded two-way bilingual education programs have proven effective in meeting the second-language learning needs of both limited-English-proficient students and monolingual-English students in a positive, integrated educational environment. These include several two-way bilingual programs in my own State at the Mackey Mosaic School in Boston, the Amigos Program in Cambridge, La Escuelita Agueybana Day Care Center in Boston, and Creciendo Juntos in Lawrence. Programs like these deserve additional Federal support, support made possible under the bill's new funding reservations. The legislation does not disturb the existing reservation of one-quarter of all Bilingual Education Act funds for training programs and activities. The lack of professionally trained teachers and school personnel remains the greatest obstacle to providing effective instruction to limited-English-proficient students. This is an obstacle the Federal Government can and must help remove.

Finally, the legislation incorporates provisions from the Senate bill requiring a comprehensive academic evaluation of students who are retained in transitional bilingual education and special alternative instructional programs for more than 3 years. I believe that the student evaluation requirement represents sound educational practice and does not infringe on the prerogatives of local school districts. The legislation does not prescribe a specific period of enrollment for students in programs assisted under the Bilingual Education Act. Local school personnel and parents are best able to determine when students should be enrolled in or exited from any instructional programs.

COMPREHENSIVE CHILD DEVELOPMENT CENTERS ACT

I am particularly pleased that the legislation includes the Comprehensive Child Development Centers Act [CCDC]. CCDC allows the establishment of between 10 and 25 centers to provide early, continuous, and comprehensive supportive services for economically disadvantaged children, beginning with prenatal care and continuing until they enter school. Studies have shown that early intervention in the lives of at-risk children yields impressive results, enhancing their physical, social, emotional, and intellectual development. Families benefit as well from the support provided by such programs.

I want to emphasize that it is critical that services be continuous. A 5-year commitment is necessary so that children who become involved in the program as infants can continue their positive growth by receiving appropriate development services until they enter public school. Fuel funding in each year's appropriation process is essential to achieve the full benefits that CCDC promises. Lack of stable funding and inconsistent political support can bring about the quick and sure demise of this demonstration effort. It is our strong conviction that no project should be undertaken without a 5-year commitment.

NATIONAL ASSESSMENT OF EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS

To help get better information about the quality of American education, this bill authorizes an expansion of the National Assessment of Educational Progress [NAEP]. NAEP is a federally funded testing program that provides evidence about the academic performance of 9-, 13-, and 17-year-old schoolchildren. For 20 years, NAEP has provided nationally and regionally representative data on how well our students are doing in math, reading and writing.

The expansion of NAEP authorized by this bill will increase the number of subject areas that are assessed, increase the frequency of the testing, and make possible the collection of State representative data. More specifically, this bill will provide for the assessment of reading and mathematics every 2 years, writing and science every 4 years and history/geography every 6 years. In addition, the bill will allow States to gather the data necessary to compare themselves to other States and the Nation as a whole. I believe that these provisions will help States decide where their schools need improvements.

I wish to emphasize that this provision is not merely intended to provide a score card so that the States may be ranked on a basis of standardized test scores. What is authorized in this bill is a demonstration so that we may see how this idea works. At the conclusion of the 1990 and 1992 assessments the Commissioner of Education Statistics is to conduct an independent study to test the viability and feasibility of this approach. I also wish to emphasize that under no circumstances is this proposal intended to allow States to rank, evaluate, or compare local schools or school districts.

IMPACT AID

The impact aid reauthorization includes a small provision that is very important to many districts in Massachusetts and around the country. This provision prevents the Department of Education from eliminating payments for children residing in section 8 housing, or asking for repayment of impact aid funds paid out for such children in previous years. Many districts were told by Department field representatives that section 8 housing was eligible property regardless of who owned the housing. Indeed, in some States, districts were encouraged by Department officials to be sure that all section 8 children were counted. Now the Department has changed its mind and wants the money back. The Department's efforts to stop payments for these children is contrary to past policy, congressional intent, and good public policy. For many districts, being forced to repay, in some cases, millions of dollars already spent, would pose tremendous hardship. The provision we have included in the reauthorization will restore payments to these districts at a level consistent with previous impact aid assistance. This is particularly important for districts such as Boston, Worcester, Holyoke, Chelsea, and Chicopee that would otherwise lose their "super B" status.

Finally, I share the strong concern of my Senate colleagues that we must do everything within our power to limit the availability of obscene messages over the telephone. However, I am concerned, as are others, about the constitutionality of the dial-a-porn provision reinserted by the House in lieu of the language agreed to by the conferees. This is a complex constitutional issue which the courts must now decide.

This omnibus package has been put together with very strong bipartisan and bicameral support and cooperation. The members of the Education Committees in both Houses deserve congratulations and commendation for this strong package. I wish to especially acknowledge the work of Senators

Pell and Stafford, the chair and ranking minority members of the Education Subcommittee. I also wish to recognize several staff members who have worked tirelessly to put this legislation together: David Evans, Ann Young, and Sarah Flanagan of Senator Pell's staff; Ellin Nolan, Barbara Fox, and Becky Rogers of Senator Stafford's office; Bobbie Dunn from Senator Hatch's office; Buddy Blakey from Senator Simon's office; and Amanda Broun, Shirley Sagawa, Rusty Barbour, and Terry Hartle from my own staff.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Dec. 4, 1987]

Solid Senator

Those who lament the decline of the Senate will soon have further cause. Robert Stafford of Vermont is retiring. The Senate will be both a louder and a lesser place for his departure.

Sen. Stafford, now 74, has spent his entire adult life in public service and not lost sight of what that term means. His career has been the old-fashioned, orderly kind, proof of the virtues of unhurried apprenticeship. He was prosecutor, state attorney general, lieutenant governor, governor, then spent 10 years in the House before his 15 in the Senate.

Too often the modern senator seems to be a telegenic wonder with an attention span measured in nanoseconds—all hare, no tortoise. Sen. Stafford is by contrast substantive, unassuming, patient and effective. He is not an ink hound. He has actually been known to pass a bill before its deadline.

His areas of greatest interest have been the environment and education. In the six years from 1981 to 1986 when the Republicans controlled the Senate, he was chairman of both the environment committee and the education subcommittee. He remains the ranking Republican on each.

Environment and education were two of the areas in which the early Reagan administration exhibited its greatest revolutionary zeal. You remember James Watt. You may also remember the president's proposals, some of which sadly continue to be made, to slash federal aid to higher education more or less in two.

Sen. Stafford quietly helped to stave off the craziness. Administration efforts to hollow out the major environmental statutes in the name of deregulation were turned aside. For a while, environmental policy was a nasty draw. More recently, some of the protective statutes have actually been refreshed and strengthened. The senator from the Green Mountain State played an important part in this turnaround. He did the same in education. Last year, his last as chairman, Congress reauthorized and secured the basic forms of aid to higher education. This year it is doing so at the elementary and secondary levels. The elementary and secondary bill passed the other day, 97 to 1. The vote is a tribute to a climate that Sen. Stafford helped produce. The Senate named the bill after him.

Sen. Stafford helped to save something else in the Reagan years. By virtue of the efforts he and others made, there continues to be room in his party for its moderates. When quiet men like Robert Stafford go, they are missed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I rise today in support of H.R. 5, "the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988." I am honored to share the name of this bill with my good friend and colleague from the House, Congressman Augustus F. Hawkins. Mr. Hawkins has served in the House of Representatives for 26 years. During that time, he has distinguished himself as a statesman and as a leader known for his dedication to providing high quality education to all our citizens. For more than 3 years, he has served as the chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee and as the chairman of the Elementary, Secondary, and Vocational Education Subcommittee. He has worked tirelessly to craft sound legislation and generations of Americans are better off today because of his efforts.

At a time when our Nation's attention is on the need to compete in a world market of increasing technical complexity, this landmark legislation reauthorizes our Nation's most vital education programs. In order for our Nation to flourish, all our citizens must be educated, literate, productive members of society. We cannot afford to lose the talents of one American. All children must leave school with the skills they need to be full participants in our democracy. H.R. 5 addresses these pressing concerns.

H.R. 5 is a national investment in education. Investing in quality education is a wise and profitable use of Federal funds because it is an investment in our future. I believe the strength of our Nation lies ultimately in our children, for they are our most precious resource. No Federal education program has done more for disadvantaged children than the Chapter 1 Program which is reauthorized in this bill. Chapter 1 provides compensatory education in reading, mathematics, and language arts for the neediest children.

Children who qualify for chapter 1 are at greatest risk of failing in school, becoming dropouts, and eventually joining the legion of the hard-core unemployed. Over the last 22 years, chapter 1 has provided supplementary instructional services to millions of disadvantaged youngsters. In the 1985-86 school year, 4.5 million children were served by this program. And we know chapter 1 is successful. Children who receive instruction through this program score better on standardized tests than eligible children who have not participated in chapter 1. The reauthorization of chapter 1 strengthens this vital program and puts into place the means for assuring high quality instruction to all eligible children.

Also included in H.R. 5 is a provision to improve the achievement of low-income, low-achieving high school students. Secondary school programs under title I serve students who have the greatest likelihood of becoming school dropouts. Keeping children in school and making it possible for those who have already dropped out to reenter high school is a wise use of Federal resources.

We must not settle for mere school attendance. All children, particularly disadvantaged children living in rural areas, must have access to high quality instruction. Our Nation's rural schools face a unique challenge. Transportation, program coordination, and resource allocation are particularly crucial in sparsely populated areas where children live great distances from their school. The rural education opportunities provision under title 1 establishes 10 rural assistance centers whose mission is to help States and local school districts improve the quality of education in rural schools.

Another program which has done much to improve the quality of education in our country is chapter 2 under title 1. Chapter 2 is unique because it gives local school districts the flexibility to make decisions about the kind of improvement most needed in their schools. As a consequence, chapter 2 has been highly successful encouraging innovation and program improvement. In keeping with the aim of educational excellence, chapter 2 also includes programs which reach out into the education community in creative ways. Distributing inexpensive books as a reading motivator, encouraging arts in education and recognizing exemplary schools are examples of broad-based, innovative programs. Such programs make a major contribution to our Nation's education system and it is disadvantaged children who stand to benefit the most.

As you know, I will not seek reelection to another term in the U.S. Senate. In light of this, many friends and colleagues ask me what I have found most rewarding about being a Senator from the State of Vermont. My work on the Education, Arts, and Humanities Subcommittee and on the Environment and Public Works Committee have been among the most rewarding challenges of my congressional career. My service on these committees has allowed me the opportunity to establish Federal policy and Federal programs which contribute to an improved quality of life in America.

No greater challenge is before the Congress and the Nation than developing the talents of our citizens. Each generation must take up this task anew, for the question of maximizing human potential is basic to the fabric of democracy. To the mind of this Senator, H.R. 5 takes up this challenge and does so to the benefit of all. It provides a means whereby the Federal Government joins hands with State and local education agencies. H.R. 5 defines an effective Federal role and as such serves the best interests of the children and adults of our Nation. A vote for H.R. 5 is a vote for better educated, better prepared, more productive citizens in tomorrow's workplace.

Let it be said that on our watch the children of our Nation, particularly the neediest children, were well served. I urge my colleagues assembled here today to join me in support of this important legislation.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, during Senate consideration of the Omnibus Elementary and Secondary Education Act last year, an amendment was offered and accepted by unanimous consent which had I been afforded the opportunity to address its content prior to passage would have resulted in a spirited debate between the Senator from Ohio and myself.

Specifically, the amendment in question required the Secretary of Education to postpone a final determination in the grants process to select the award recipient of the National Center for Research in Vocational Education Award, pending a General Accounting Office [GAO] review of the department's selection process. I am pleased that the conferees on H.R. 5 have chosen not to take this type of action. For the benefit of my colleagues who have not been directly involved in this matter, I would like to provide some background information.

In 1984, Congress passed the Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act. Under this act, the National Center for Research in Vocational Education was reauthorized to design and conduct research and developmental projects in the area of vocational education. As a result of problems experienced in a previous competitive process for this particular grant, Congress included specific requirements within the law to offer guidance to the Secretary in selecting future award recipients.

Utilizing these guidelines, the department began a painstaking process to select the recipient of the center grant, including the careful selection of a panel to review all applications. After the formal announcement of the grant process in November 1986, applications were submitted by the University of California at Berkeley, Northern Arizona University, and Ohio State University. These applications were reviewed, site visits were conducted, and on January 4, 1988, it was formally announced that Berkeley had been selected as the clear winner of the competition.

Last year, it became known that Berkeley had been tentatively selected prior to the official announcement and coincidentally, before Senate consideration of the elementary and secondary education reauthorization measure. Hence, an amendment was offered to H.R. 5 under the guise of fraud to prevent a final award to Berkeley.

For those of my colleagues with more than a passing imterest in this matter, I would recommend the GAO's report on the department's grants process (Report No. 88-56). Since the department was barred from including remarks within the GAO's written report, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the Education Department's response be included at this point in the Record. After reviewing both documents, I am convinced that the Department adhered to congressional guidelines.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

U.S. Department of Education,
Jan. 26, 1988.

Fred Yohey,
Group Director, Elementary and Secondary Education, General Accounting Office, Washington, DC.

Dear Mr. Yohey: On January 4, 1988, you and two members of your staff, Debra Eisenberg and Saundra Baxter, provided Department of Education officials with a briefing on the outcome of GAO's review of the Department's decision-making process in awarding a grant for the National Center for Research in Vocationial Education.

At the briefing, you indicated that the grant award process had not violated any statutes or regulations and you did not recommend that the competition be reopened. Furthermore, you stated that your staff had found "nothing arbitrary or capricious" about the process the Department used in making the award. Nonetheless, you identified five areas of general concern. We did not respond to the stated areas of concern during that briefing as it was our understanding that in the normal GAO audit process, the Department would have an opportunity to respond to a written draft report. But since you are providing only a final report, and not allowing us to respond in writing to a draft, we are providing you with a summary of the Department's analysis and response to the concerns mentioned in the January 4 briefing.

It is important to note that the grant award process for the National Center for Research in Vocational Education was conducted in strict compliance with an Application Review Plan for recompetition which described every major step of the process and which was available for your review. Procedures were developed for screening ineligible applicants, conducting a panel review of the technical merit of each application, ranking of applications using standardized scores, and conducting site visits of the top three applicants. This plan was prepared by the Office of Vocational and Adult Education (OVAE) and approved by the Department's Grants and Contracts Service (GCS) on July 1, 1987, prior to the submission of applications. Approval of an Application Review Plan is part of the normal Departmental review process. Departmental policy requires that a plan be approved for every discretionary grant program.

Furthermore, while GAO did express a general concern about some aspects of the competition process, as discussed below, we believe it is clear that the competition was not only in accordance with all legal requirements and internal Department procedures, but that it was also a process that was fair and neutral with respect to all applicants. In particular, we also believe that the concerns you have raised did not prejudice any particular applicant during this competition.

Let me first identify each area of concern that you cited, briefly summarize your findings, and then provide you with a summary of the Department's analysis.

READER QUALIFICATIONS

The Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act requires that, in making the grant award for the National Center for Research in Vocational Education, the Secretary shall act with the advice of a panel composed of individuals appointed by the Secretary who are not Federal employees and "who are recognized nationally as experts in vocational education administration and research." (Sec. 404(a)(2)).

The Department utilized a long-standing administrative procedure for selecting nonfederal reviewers. OVAE staff, who are themselves nationally recognized in the field of vocational education, identified experts to serve on the panel. The staff submitted a list of potential panel members to the Acting Assistant Secretary. The Acting Assistant Secretary requested that the list include the panel members who had previously served on the panels that reviewed the Fourth Year Continuation Application for the National Center and the Planning Grant Applications for the National Center. Reviewers were selected from this list and from the personal professional knowledge of the Acting Assistant Secretary. The Acting Assistant Secretary, of course, was in an excellent position to judge whether individuals are national experts in this field and, as the Federal official primarily responsible for administering this program, his judgment should be given great deference. Furthermore, if you review the resumes of the reviewers, you will find that each has impressive vocational education credentials.

In your review of whether or not the panelists could be considered national experts, your method of assessment of national expertise placed sole emphasis on name recognition. You quickly polled representatives of five national organizations and drew conclusions from a very small group in a large field. In a field as broad as vocational education, there are many nationally recognized experts who might not be known to certain parts of the vocational education community. Therefore, the Department believes that the GAO's method of assessing reader qualifications is highly questionable. We believe the panelists who served as reviewers in this competition are recognized nationally as experts in vocational education administration and research.

SITE VISITS

You indicated that the three site visits by the panel were not totally comparable inasmuch as tours of the facilities were conducted at Ohio State University and Northern Arizona University, but not at the University of California at Berkeley, thereby allegedly allowing more time for the question and answer session at Berkeley.

The site visits were conducted in accordance with the aforementioned approved Application Review Plan and therefore the treatment of each applicant was eminently fair. Each site visit was to be one day in length consisting of a briefing by the project director and/or his staff followed by a period during which panel members could ask questions of the project director and his staff. Each project director was sent an identical letter which indicated that it would be appropriate for him to expand, supplement or summarize any salient points raised in the application during the one to two hour briefing. While project directors were also advised that taking panel members on the tour of their facilities would be appropriate, it was also suggested that they might wish to show panel members slides, photographs and/or blueprints of additional off-site facilities. Therefore, it was left to the discretion of each applicant to choose how he would organize this allotted time. The fact that the University of California at Berkeley chose to show panel members a slide presentation during the briefing session rather than conduct a facilities tour does not deviate from the approved Application Review Plan or from the instructions sent to the Project Directors.

SUBSTANTIAL FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTION

The Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act requires that every applicant present evidence that it will make a substantial financial contribution towards the operation of the National Center. In that the law does not define what constitutes substantial financial contribution, Department officials relied upon their professional judgment and experience for assessing the applicant's contribution.

The assessment of financial contribution was reviewed as an eligibility requirement. (See 34 C.F.R. 417.2). All three applications were found to be eligible and subsequently forwarded to the panel. Points were not assigned in the evaluation process based on the amount of the financial contribution, because the published selection criteria in the program regulations do not contain this as a criterion.

In its application, the University of California at Berkeley indicated an annual contribution of approximately 10 percent of the annual $6 million award from the Department. The Department maintains that an annual contribution by the grantee of over 10 percent is clearly substantial.

SCORES

In the briefing, you stated that panelists knew the scores and rank order of each of the applications prior to the site visits. If this is true, a panelist, not OVAE, ranked the scores independently, not in the supervised group process, and did so based on raw scores, not standardized scores. Nevertheless, we have no knowledge that this indeed took place.

The approved Application Review Plan outlined the procedures to be utilized for the panel review for technical merit, procedures for ranking the applications using standardized scores, and procedures for the site visits. These procedures were followed by OVAE staff and panelists. For the panel review conducted August 24-28, 1987, after a morning orientation session on the 24th, panel members began to read and score each criterion of each application independently and without discussion. An OVAE staff member monitored these sessions at all times. When an application was completed by a panel member, the Technical Review form was collected from that member and the scores were checked for accuracy. When the review and scoring were completed on August 28, 1987, on all applications, an OVAE staff member conducted a discussion during which the panel member who had given the highest score on a given criterion and the panel member who had given the lowest score explained their decisions and rationale. This is a long-standing OVAE practice used to ensure that important criteria have not been overlooked and that the review was comprehensive.

It is important to note one application is not scored against another. Each is reviewed independently, criterion by criterion. It is also important to note that no panelist changed a score as a result of the high/low score discussion and August 28, 1987. All materials were then collected by OVAE staff before the panelists left the room. Panelists had no further access to any materials including score sheets until the site visits.

The integrity of the review process was further maintained during the site visits. At the conclusion of each site visit, panelists were given the opportunity to rescore that application. This was in accordance with the procedures set forth in the approved Application Review Plan. Again, each panelist independently scored and reviewed the application, and at the end of each site visit, materials were collected by OVAE staff. Furthermore, no official Department ranking took place until the total process was completed, including all of the site visits, after which the raw scores were converted into standard scores by the Grants and Contracts Service Division and final rankings were computed.[1]

DIRECTOR AND CO-DIRECTOR

As a final point, you indicated in your review that the application of the University of California at Berkeley called for co-directors. The regulations at 34 C.F.R. 417.40 require that the Center have a Director.

Based on advice of counsel, it was determined that this was a minor technical issue which could be addressed during the negotiation process conducted by the Grants and Contracts Service Division. This determination was made in accordance with Departmental practice. Disapproval of Departmental grant applicants on the basis of minor technical issues of this nature might well result in a substantial decrease of qualified applicants and a resulting reduction in educational innovation and grant award competition.

It is also important to note that the issue of a Center Director is not included in the initial eligibility criterion and therefore can be resolved during the course of the negotiations process.

Finally, we appreciate GAO's recommendations on improving the grant competition process in the future. However, we believe that your report should clearly indicate that GAO did not find that the recent competition violated any statutory or regulatory requirements and that GAO does not recommend that the award be recompeted.

Sincerely,

BONNIE GUITON,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. WILSON. Since no glaring flaws were uncovered by the GAO after reviewing the national center grant selection process, the Secretary of Education awarded the center grant to Berkeley. Subsequently, Ohio State University, the previous grantee, filed suit against the Department in Ohio Federal District Court. Recently, a decision was reached by the Judge which, in my view, illustrates a complete lack of understanding of Federal grant procedures. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the Ohio Federal District Court's brief, as well as Berkeley's response, be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Case No. C2-88-0027]

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT—SOUTHERN OHIO DISTRICT

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY, PLAINTIFF V. U.S. DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION, ET AL., DEFENDANTS

OPINION AND ORDER

This matter is now before the Court for final disposition of plaintiff's, the Board of Trustees of The Ohio State University (Ohio State), request for injunctive and declaratory relief against defendants, the U.S. Department of Education, the Secretary of the Department of Education and the United States of America (Secretary). This Court has jurisdiction of this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1441 and 5 U.S.C. § 702. The question presented is whether the Secretary complied with Section 404 of the Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act, 20 U.S.C. § 2404, as enacted by Public Law 98-524, and 34 C.F.R. Parts 75, 400 and 417, when he awarded a five-year, $30 million grant to Berkeley for the operation of the National Center for Research in Vocational Education.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDINGS

On August 16, 1985, the Secretary announced in the Federal Register the procedures and criteria which would be used in the competition. 50 Fed. Reg. 33,267 (1985) (to be codified at 34 C.F.R. § 417). On September 16, 1986, the Secretary announced the availability of planning grants for the stated purpose of assisting individuals, public or private agencies, organizations or institutions in developing innovative approaches for expanded activities of the National Center, and to increase the quantity and quality of applications for the National Center, 51 Fed. Reg. 32,882. On November 28, 1986, the Secretary solicited applications for the National Center that provided for an August 14, 1987 deadline, 51 Fed. Reg. 43,069 (1986). The solicitation provided that the applications were subject to compliance with the regulations in 34 C.F.R. Part 417 and The Education Department General Administrative Regulations, 34 C.F.R. Parts 74, 75, 77 and 78. On or before August 14, 1987, the Secretary received three applications for the National Center. The applicants were Ohio State, Northern Arizona University and a consortium arrangement under the guise of The University of California at Berkeley (Berkeley).

After the August 14, 1987, closing date for the National Center grant application, the Office of Vocational and Adult Education (OVAE) reviewed each application for eligibility under 34 C.F.R. § 417.20. The OVAE was satisfied that each applicant met eligibility requirements. From August 24 through October 1, 1987, a panel of nationally recognized experts in the field of vocational education administration and research evaluated each application on the basis of the criteria contained in 34 C.F.R. § 417.31. The panel reviewed each application and awarded points based on the following selection criteria: the high quality and effectiveness of the required services and activities; quality of the management plan; quality of the key personnel; institutional experience of the applicant; adequacy of the applicant's resources; adequacy of budget and cost effectiveness; and external relationships with interested and affected entities, 34 C.F.R. §§ 417.30-31. Prior to actual award of the grant, the Secretary engaged in negotiation with the applicant having the highest standardized score (Berkeley) in order to clarify their obligations under the grant. Following the negotiation process Berkeley was designated the National Center on January 4, 1988.

[1] The Application Review Plan had contemplated a preliminary ranking prior to the site visits to determine the top three applicants to be visited. However, since there are only three applicants, approval was sought and granted not to rank the applications at that time. Thus, only one official ranking was done after the total process, including the site visits, was completed.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

On January 8, 1988, Ohio State filed a complaint and a motion for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction alleging that the Secretary's review of the grant applications and award of the grant violated statutory and regulatory requirements. On January 11, 1988, this Court held a hearing and granted Ohio State's motion for the temporary restraining order. On February 10-11, 1988, this Court consolidated the hearing of Ohio State's application for a preliminary injunction with the trial on the merits pursuant to F.R.C.P. 65 (a)(2). The Court recognized that this case is not the proper subject of a trial de novo, Citizens To Preserve Overton Park v. Volpe, 401 U.S. 402, 415-416 (1970). However, the purpose of the "consolidation" was two-fold: first, testimony was taken to determine whether equitable relief was appropriate; and second, to clarify and amplify the actions taken by the Secretary in order to determine if they were consistent with and followed the statutory mandate regarding the National Center.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

Initially, it is necessary for the Court to determine whether Ohio State is entitled to judicial review of the Secretary's action in awarding the grant for the National Center to Berkeley. The Secretary argues that the portion of the Perkins Act dealing with the National Center does not provide for any judicial review of Department of Education actions in regard to the selection of a grantee or the administration of the grant, in that other sections of the Act specifically provide for judicial review.

Judicial review of the Secretary's decision is governed by the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 551 et seq. The APA provides that the action of each authority of the government of the United States is subject to judicial review except to the extent that statutes preclude judicial review or agency action is committed to agency discretion by law. The APA provisions embody a presumption in favor of judicial review. The right to review is not to be denied absent clear and convincing evidence of contrary legislative intent. Lubrizol Corp. v. Train, 547 F.2d 310 (CA6 1976). The mere fact that 20 U.S.C. § 2404 makes no provision for judicial review while other sections of the Perkins Act specifically provide for judicial review is not clear and convincing evidence that Congress intended to preclude judicial review of the National Center grant process. Furthermore, the Secretary's discretion to authorize funding for the center has been severely restricted by the enabling act, 20 U.S.C. § 2404. For these reasons the Court determines that judicial review of the Secretary's action is entirely appropriate.

ANALYSIS—I

The declaratory and injunctive relief sought by Ohio State is available under 5 U.S.C. § 706, which provides that "the reviewing court shall decide all relevant questions of law, interpret constitutional and statutory provisions, and determine the meaning or applicability of the terms of an agency action." Additionally, "the reviewing court shall . . . hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings and conclusions found to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law." 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A). The general rule of APA review is that the Court shall decide all relevant questions of law and interpret statutory provisions. See, NLRB v. Hearst, 322 U.S. 111 (1944). The Secretary's actions are entitled to a presumption of regularity and this Court is not empowered to substitute its judgment for that of the agency, Overton Park, 415-416 (1970). However, the presumption of regularity does not shield the Secretary's actions from a thorough, probing and indepth review, Id.

In order to properly review the Secretary's actions, the Court is first required to determine whether the Secretary acted within the scope of his authority. Id., at 415, quoting Schilling v. Rogers, 363 U.S. 666, 676-677 (1960). Thus, the Court must consider whether the Secretary properly exercised his authority to designate Berkeley as the National Center. The Secretary's authority to designate an entity as the National Center is derived in part from 20 U.S.C. § 2404.

The Perkins Act authorizes the Secretary to designate and fund a National Center for Research in Vocational Education after grant applications have been reviewed in compliance with 20 U.S.C. 2404, as enacted by Public Law 98-524. The Act provides for the establishment of a National Center which shall have as its primary purpose "the design and conduct of research and developmental projects and programs" in vocational education. 20 U.S.C. § 2404(b). The statute states in relevant part that:

(2) The Secretary shall provide support for the National Center through an annual grant for its operation. The National Center shall be a nonprofit entity associated with a public or private nonprofit university which is prepared to make a substantial financial contribution toward its establishment. The Secretary shall, on the basis of solicited applications, designate the entity to be the National Center once every five years, acting with the advice of a panel composed of individuals appointed by the Secretary who are not federal employees and who are recognized nationally as experts in vocational education administration and research.

(3) The National Center shall have a Director, appointed by the University with which it is associated . . .

20 U.S.C. § 2404(a) (2)-(3). The statute simply requires the Secretary, acting with the advice of national experts in vocational education administration and research, to fund a single National Center. The organization chosen as the National Center is required to be nonprofit, associated with a university that is prepared to make a substantial financial contribution towards its establishment and have a single Director.

A

Under 34 C.F.R. § 417.20, an applicant is eligible to be designated the National Center if: (1) the application is from a nonprofit entity associated with a university and (2) is prepared to make a substantial financial contribution towards the establishment of the National Center. The eligibility criteria did not address whether an application needed to provide for a single director as required by 20 U.S.C. § 2404(A)(3). The Secretary dismissed the statutory criterion as a "minor technical issue" that would be resolved in the negotiation process.

The Secretary's attempt to explain away the unambiguous statutory requirement is woefully inadequate. An issue is deemed substantial when it is addressed in the context of a statute—there is nothing minor when an issue concerns the intent of Congress as expressed in a statute. The articulated purpose of the negotiation process is to clarify the provisional awardee's obligations under the grant. Congress, clearly set out the minimum eligibility requirements in section (a) of the statute. The statutory language is clear, Congress specified that the National Center have "a Director." The Secretary was responsible for implementation of 20 U.S.C. § 2404 and should have required that the applications provide for a Director. The Secretary's failure to make initial eligibility contingent upon statutory compliance is not in accordance with 20 U.S.C. § 2404(a).

B

Actually, the Berkeley application describes the Director position in terms of co-directors (Drs. Benson and Swanson) or co-principle investigators who, at the apex of the management heirarchy, are ultimately responsible for the entire Center. P. Ex. 14 at 40. Such an arrangement does not comply with 20 U.S.C. § 2404(a).

As the Court noted previously, the statute clearly requires a single Director. Such a construction does not allow for a co-directorship or any other similar arrangement. Apparently concerned with statutory compliance, the Secretary, during the negotiation process, asked Berkeley whether its National Center would have "one director." P. Ex. 15 at Management Q.1(a). In response, Berkeley stated that Dr. Benson would be the Director and Dr. Swanson would be an Associate Director. P. Ex. 16 at Management Q.1(a). The Secretary was satisfied with Berkeley's change of titles although it "did not change the substance at all." Tr. at 284. Dr. Benson testified that the change of title did not change his role in the National Center organization described in the application. Tr. 259. Dr. Swanson testified likewise. Tr. 310. This suggests to the Court that the change was merely to give the appearance of compliance when, in fact, there is in substance, two directors or co-directors of the project.

II

The Berkeley application was submitted pursuant to 34 C.F.R. 75.128. That regulation generally permits a group or consortium of eligible parties to apply for a Department of Education grant by designating one member of the group as applicant and including the consortium agreement with its application. The Berkeley application stated that it was a proposal from The University of California at Berkeley, The University of Illinois, The University of Minnesota, The Rand Corporation, Teachers College of Columbia University, and Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

After thorough examination, the Court notes that the multi-volume Berkeley application does not include any contracts between institutions. When the Secretary requested copies of the subcontracts, during the negotiation process, Berkeley declined to provide subcontracts on the grounds that it had a policy not to draw up subcontracts prior to an award. P. Ex. 16 at Management Q.6(a). However, Berkeley did provide a "model of a subcontractual agreement which typifies the format utilized by the University of California at Berkeley" during the negotiation process. Id. The Secretary's actions were not in accordance with 34 C.F.R. 75 12B(G).

A.

Ohio State argues that the consortium arrangement contemplated by Berkeley is inconsistent with the 20 U.S.C. § 2404(a), in that the statute requires "the" National Center . . . to be associated with "a" . . . university. The plaintiffs contend that the Berkeley award violates that requirement by funding a group of six regional centers. The Secretary claims that the Berkeley application misused the term "consortium" because in reality the relationship between Berkeley and the five other institutions described by the substance of the application was a prime contractor-subcontractor relationship which is permitted by 20 U.S.C. § 2404(b).

Plaintiffs attribute to Congress an intent to limit the Secretary's discretion to only fund one National Center which has one location as opposed to a National Center which is in fact a series of regional centers. The National Center was originally created in 1976 by 20 U.S.C. § 2401, as enacted by Public Law 94-482. The reasons for the action and the meaning of the exact text of the statute were explained when the statute was enacted:

> The term "center" implies centrality and concentration of resources. Inherent in the concept is the critical mass of resources and interdependent functions to cost effectively and adequately serve the impact on vocational education. Problems of planning, coordination, and essential functions such as dissemination and information services are confounded if divided among several "national" centers.
> During the House . . . hearings on the vocational education bill, testimony was presented and discussed relating to the single versus multiple centers concept. This same issue of center versus centers was raised and debated and not brought to a vote because of the strong support in the subcommittee and committee. Considering all the testimony presented, as well as related information collected directly by the House subcommittee, it was clearly substantiated that a single national center should be established which is selected on a competitive basis with the ability to directly, or through contracts with other public agencies, work on the solving of vocational problems of national significance. Each time the matter was discussed, the important need for providing a "critical mass" of resources in one center to provide national center functions as specified in the vocational education bill, was clearly established. Based on first, this highly stressed need, second, the fact that the federal government has not been capable of adequately supporting even one national center since 1965, and third, the extensive support from the practitioners and leaders in the field of vocational education for the single national center concept, the Education and Labor Committee derived the language stated in the House Bill.

122 CONG. REC. 11, 13379-80 (May 11, 1976) (Remarks of Rep. Mottl) (Emphasis supplied).

The 1976 statute specifically permitted the Commissioner of Education to award the National Center to an agency with multiple "locations, including contracts with one or more regional research centers." 20 U.S.C. 2401. That language was included to allow for regional research centers and other public agencies to be funded through the National Center. The Commissioner then used his discretion to fund a National Center in one location with no regional centers.

In 1984, the question of one National Center in one location rather than multiple locations was raised again. Congress resolved this question in favor of one National Center in one location. It deleted the provision for multiple locations and regional centers and presently permits a prime contractor-subcontractor relationship. Congress rejected Senate amendments to the Perkins Act that would have required that funding for vocational education research be divided among institutions, with no single institution receiving more than 20 percent of the available funding. H.R. Conf. Rep. 1120, 98th Cong., reprinted in 1984 U.S. Code Cong. and Admin. News 4154. Congress Committee observed that:

> The Committee wishes to call attention to the fact that this bill continues the mandate for a national center for research in vocational education, which under the current legislative authority has provided a significant improvement to the vocational education field.

H.R. No. 612, 98th Cong., reprinted in 1984 U.S. Code Cong. and Admin. News 4112 (Emphasis supplied).

The intention is clear from the legislative history of the statute—Congress unequivocally mandated that one National Center in one location must be funded. However, Berkeley's application described what the terms of the consortium relationship would be and stressed the novelty of the "new organizational structure for the National Center." The application stated:

> The conventional approach to a research center has been to locate all principal researchers in one place, creating a critical mass of individuals concentrating on a common set of topics, often around one intellectual leader. For the proposed National Center, however, this model is unworkable. We will replace the conception of the Center as a single institution, with personnel in one location, with a contractual relationship among six institutions . . . (P. Ex., at 37) (Emphasis supplied).
> It is conventional wisdom that the management of several institutions may be more complex than the management of a Center located at a single institution. We recognize this potential difficulty, but we also believe that ease of management ought to be subordinate to fulfilling the mission of the National Center. Once this mission has been defined, and the necessity for a consortium of institutions established, then the task remaining is to devise a management structure that will enable that mission to be fulfilled effectively as possible . . . (Id., at 171) (Emphasis supplied).

Nevertheless, Berkeley insisted that the above described consortium arrangement was contractual in nature. Their application stated:

> We are using the term "consortium" generically to describe our multi-institutional contractual arrangements. Berkeley is and will remain the central location for the Center and will have full and final responsibility for administering the Center's grant. (P. Ex. 14 at 170).

The Court disagrees. Berkeley's organizational model is clearly at odds with its disclaimer and with Congressional intent. In 1976 Congress determined that the efficiency and efficacy of the National Center required a "critical mass of resources" in one center. For the National Center, individuals comprise the prime resource for the purposes of vocational education research. Furthermore, in 1984, Congress rejected the idea that the mission of the National Center necessitated a consortium of institutions. Berkeley's application does not adhere to the clear intent of Congress. However, during the negotiation process, the Secretary instructed Berkeley to "delete all references to a consortium in order to reflect the fact that the grant will be supporting a national center and the five institutions with which it subcontracts." P. Ex. 15, at Management Q.5 (b). Berkeley agreed to do so. P. Ex. 16 at Management Q.5 (b). The Secretary's request is an admission which supports plaintiff's assertion that the Berkeley application was ineligible.

B.

Ohio State argues that Berkeley's financial contribution towards the establishment of the National Center is not substantial. The various contributions and concessions from each institution listed in the Berkeley application total $685,597. P. Ex. 14 at App. Vol. C, p. 17. Berkeley alone would contribute $93,241. Id.

20 U.S.C. § 2404 mandates that the university associated with the National Center is to provide a substantial financial contribution towards its establishment. An application must describe the financial contribution the university will make towards the establishment of the National Center. 34 C.F.R. 417.20. Neither the statute nor the regulations define what constitutes a substantial financial contribution. The Secretary viewed the assessment of financial contribution as an eligibility requirement. Dec. Bonnie Guiton, at Attachment A, p. 4.

The Secretary concluded during the negotiation process that a larger proportion of the Berkeley contribution had to come directly from Berkeley rather than simply flow through Berkeley from the other institutions. Tr. 281. As a result, Berkeley agreed to pledge a direct annual contribution in excess of $600,000. Tr. 237. These actions are admissions by the Secretary and Berkeley and support the conclusion that the Berkeley application was ineligible at the very threshold of this process.

C.

Ohio State contends that the Secretary's selection of the review panel violated 20 U.S.C. § 2404 in two respects. First, that the panel was not wholly comprised of individuals "recognized nationally as experts in vocational education administration and research." The plaintiff has pointed to nothing in the express language or legislative history of the Perkins Act which could provide the Court with parameters or guidance by which the Court could determine whether the appointment of the panelists violated the statutory provision that they be "recognized nationally as experts in vocational education administration and research."

The determination of who qualifies as "recognized nationally as experts in vocational education administration and research" is a classic example of a determination committed to the discretion of an agency that has special expertise necessary to make a qualified judgment. Such a determination is beyond the competence of this Court and is not subject to judicial review. This Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the Secretary.

Second, Ohio State argues that the Secretary violated minimal standards of fairness to the applicants when he allowed two persons to be selected as panelists that had previous contact with the existing National Center. 20 U.S.C. § 2404 requires a panel composed of individuals appointed by the Secretary who are not federal employees and who are recognized nationally as experts in vocational education administration and research. The panelists also had to be unbiased and not have any affiliations with the grant applicants. Dec. John Pucciano.

The Secretary conducted a regular, annual review of the performance of the National Center, in 1986. This was prior to funding the Center for 1987. The review was conducted by a panel of five persons which included Donald Roberts. Also in 1986, the Secretary announced the availability of planning grants to assist potential participants in preparation for the 1987 National Center competition. The Secretary appointed a panel of five persons to review the applications which included Phillip Atkinson. In 1987, these same individuals, Donald Roberts and Phillip Atkinson, along with three others, were appointed by the Secretary to review the applications for the National Center Competition.

It is obvious that the Secretary did not follow informal guidelines when he selected Drs. Roberts and Atkinson. It is equally apparent that the doctors must * * * their previous contacts with the existing National Center. The previous contact that the Doctors had with the applicants raises serious questions concerning their objectivity and openmindedness and gives, at the very least, an appearance of impropriety. Such action by the Secretary is an abuse of discretion.

D.

Finally, Ohio State claims that the Secretary failed to have the panel review the amended Berkeley application. The Secretary contends that the action was harmless because none of the changes were significant under the seven criteria panelists applied. The Secretary's counsel clearly expressed the Secretary's view:

> [i]t was none of the site reviewer's business, quite frankly, your Honor, whether or not there was a substantial contribution, whether or not there were co-directors, whether or not there was one national center.

20 U.S.C. § 2404(a) mandates that the award of the National Center is to be based on application and requires the Secretary to act with the advice of a panel of nationally recognized experts in vocational education administration and research. It is obvious that the Secretary denied the panel an effective opportunity to review applications by permitting Berkeley to amend its application after panel review. Furthermore, the Secretary's position cannot withstand even cursory review of the criteria by which the panelists were to evaluate the applications. One of the most important criteria as "management", which accounted for 20% of the total score. In evaluating "management," the panelists were to examine:

> (i) The applicant's philosophy of management for the National Center.
> (ii) How the applicant will implement * * * the National Center, particularly with regard to the public or private nonprofit university with which it is associated;
> (iii) The applicant's plan for managing the National Center's activities and personnel, including quality control procedures for its activities and products and procedures for monitoring compliance with timeliness.

34 C.F.R. § 417.31(b).

Clearly, changes from a co-directorship to a single director and the governmental arrangements of a consortium versus that of a prime contractor-subcontractor relationship would have great significance under the management criterion. Moreover, it was under the management criterion that the scores varied most dramatically between the written applications and site reviews.

If the changes effected in Berkeley's amendment to its application during the negotiation process, did not change the substance of the application, then the statutory defects were never cured. If the changes were substantial enough to cure the defects, their effect on management and organization was so great as to require review by the panel.

CONCLUSION

The Court notes that "[t]he interpretation of a statute by an agency charged with its enforcement is a substantial factor to be considered in construing the statute." Youakim v. Miller, 425 U.S. 231 atk 235-236 (1976), citing New York Department of Social Services v. Dublino, 413 U.S. 405, 421 (1973). However, in this case it appears that the Secretary substantially ignored applicable statutory and regulatory requirements. The Secretary's departure from the requirements is evident in relation to the negotiation process. The negotiation process permitted the Secretary to engage in result orientation, while paying lip service to statutory and regulatory guidelines. In light of the legislative history of the Act and the plain language of the statute, an "apply now-conform later" scheme is clearly not what Congress intended.

Such a scheme is not permitted under the applicable regulations. 34 C.F.R. § 75.109(b) allows an applicant to make changes to its application on or before the deadline date for submitting applications under the program. Under 34 C.F.R. § 75.216(a)(2)(3), the Secretary is supposed to return an application to an applicant if the applicant does not comply with all of the procedural rules that govern the submission of the application or if the application does not contain the information required under the program. The undisputed facts show that Berkeley did not amend its application on or before the deadline of August 14, 1987, in regard to the necessity for: (A) copies of sub-contracts; (B) a single Director; (C) a substantial financial contribution; and (D) a single National Center. The facts also show that the Secretary did not return Berkeley's non-conforming application. This defect was not cured by the negotiation process—applicants may not apply now and conform to statutory or regulatory requirements after the deadline date. The Secretary's failure to return Berkeley's application is contrary to the provisions of 35 C.F.R. 75.216.

The factors to be considered in determining whether a motion for preliminary injunction should be granted are well established. They are: (1) whether the plaintiff has shown a strong or substantial likelihood or probability of success on the merits; (2) whether the plaintiff has shown irreparable injury; (3) whether the issuance of a preliminary injunction would cause substantial harm to others; and, (4) whether the public interest would be served by issuing a preliminary injunction. Mason County Medical Association v. Knebel, 563 F.2d 256, 261 (CA6 1977).

After reviewing all of the relevant documents and listening to testimony, the Court is satisfied as indicated by the above discussion that the plaintiff's case is clearly meritorious. The plaintiff also showed that it would suffer irreparable harm if the Secretary is permitted to award the grant to Berkeley. The loss of a 30 million dollar grant is certainly substantial and irreparably harmful. The Court is satisfied that the potential harm caused to others by issuing an injunction is far outweighed by the public need for a National Vocational Education Center established and operated in accordance with the law as specifically intended by Congress. In light of the public interest in seeing government officials comply with the law and the intent of Congress in the establishment of the National Vocational Center, the Court finds that the public interest will be served if the Secretary is enjoined from awarding the grant to Berkeley.

Therefore, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed:

1. That the Secretary vacate the designation of the University of California at Berkeley as the National Center for Research in Vocational Education.
2. That the Secretary return the application submitted by the University of California at Berkeley as ineligible.
3. That the Secretary begin anew the award process in strict compliance with 20 U.S.C. § 2404 and applicable regulations.
4. That the new award process shall be consistent with this opinion.

GEORGE C. SMITH,
United States District Judge.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,
Berkeley, CA, March 18, 1988.

Re: Arguments for reversal of the Court's decision

On March 15, 1988, the United States District Court in the Eastern Division of the Southern Ohio District ordered the Secretary of Education to vacate the designation of the University of California at Berkeley as the National Center for Research in Vocational Education. The Court did so because it judged that the application submitted by Berkeley was ineligible for consideration by the Department of Education.

With all due respect, the Court has grossly misread the proposal submitted by Berkeley, misinterprted key sections of the law and regulations governing the award of grants and contracts, displayed little knowledge of standard negotiating practices in the award process, and ignored the findings of a review of this particular award process through an independent audit conducted by the General Accounting Office. If this decision is allowed to stand, it will establish an astonishing new precedent that will invite every loser in government competitions to seek judicial on the slightest technicality. It will seriously undermine the government's ability to make awards that best serve the national interest. It threatens the very heart of the competitive process that helps to ensure that the government supports activities of the highest quality for the best price.

LISTING OF ARGUMENTS

1. Three of Judge Smith's four reasons for ruling Berkeley's application was ineligible were based on provisions of the Perkins Act describing the National Center. However, the regulations governing the application procedure described who was eligible to apply to become the Center, and Berkeley's application did meet those requirements. The Judge's ruling on our compliance with the Perkins Act is therefore irrelevant (see Argument 1 below). The fourth reason was a conflict with EDGAR's requirement that copies of subcontracts be included with proposals (see item 6 below).

2. Even if the Perkins Act itself were taken to determine who was eligible to apply, the substantive issues on which the Judge ruled Berkeley's application did not conform are all matters of interpretation. By substituting his own judgment for the Secretary's on these three matters, the Judge failed to honor the usual presumption that the executive is correct in discretionary matters within its authority. Judges should overrule the executive only if the executive is flagrantly wrong. If Judge Smith's decision were allowed to become precedent, all losing bidders in federal procurement competitions would be invited to file suit in hopes that judges would see some substantive reason to overturn the decision of the executive. (This has to be written by a lawyer.)

3. Even if the Judge had authority to substitute his judgment for the Secretary's, his interpretation of the facts was not correct. The first substantive issue is whether or not Berkeley proposed a single National Center. Even in our original proposal, submitted prior to August 14, we did propose a single Center with subcontractors, not regional centers as implied in Judge Smith's decision. (See Argument 3, below.)

4. The second substantive conflict Judge Smith saw between the Berkeley proposal and the Perkins Act was whether we proposed a single director. We did. (See Argument 4, below.)

5. The third conflict Judge Smith saw between our proposal and the Perkins Act was whether the University of California was prepared to make a "substantial financial contribution" toward establishing the National Center. It was. (See Argument 5, below).

6. The Court notes that Berkeley's proposal contained no subcontracts with each of the other five institutions with whom Berkeley intended to work. 34 C.F.R. 75 128 does not require submission of subcontracts, it does require the submission of a written agreement. Berkeley's application fully complies with 34 C.F.R. 75.128. (See Argument 6, below).

7. This decision, which is wrong for the reasons stated above, should be overturned quickly, and Ohio State should be enjoined from any further legal action that will impede the operation of the National Center at Berkeley. Expedited procedures are warranted because the Perkins Act requires that there shall be a National Center and until this lawsuit is settled the operation of the Center is stalled. Neither the Center at Berkeley nor the former Center at Ohio State is able to function effectively, especially with regard to performing the service functions specified in the Perkins Act. Furthermore, the public interest demands that the National Center provide information to Congress and other interested parties as the Perkins Act enters its period of review for re-authorization Congressional hearings on re-authorization of the Perkins Act are expected to begin in early 1989—possibly sooner. As is usually the case in reauthorization of major Federal legislation, provider and client groups review the existing Act and establish their positions well in advance of hearings to be of use in the process of re-authorization, the National Center must proceed immediately to analyze existing large national data sets in an intensive fashion. Berkeley has already begun that analysis; it is also providing other kinds of information and leadership in the process of reviewing the Perkins Act. It should be allowed to continue to do so. (See Argument 7, below)

ARGUMENT 1 APPLICANT/GRANTEE

There is a clear distinction between applicants and grantees in the statutes and regulations governing the designation of the National Center for Research in Vocational Education by the Secretary of Education. It appears that the court at several points in its decision failed to recognize that distinction. On page 7, Paragraph A, the court cites 34 CFR 417.20: "an applicant is eligible to be designated the National Center if: (1) the application is from a nonprofit entity associated with a university and (2) is prepared to make a substantial financial contribution towards the establishment of the National Center." The operative word in this sentence is not "applicant" as the court presumes but "designated." The question then is not if the cited requirements of the statute are met by the applicant but if the requirements of the statute are met by the designee. Under this line of reasoning, therefore, the judge's finding in the last sentence of page 8, ("The Secretary's failure to make initial eligibility contingent upon statutory compliance is not in accordance with 20 U.S.C. 2404(a)") is incorrect.

The same argument holds with the judge's finding that Berkeley was a consortium and not a contractor-subcontractor relationship. The only statutes and regulations on this issue do not in any part mention the word "applicant" only "Center" or "Grantee." Leaving the other issues related to this issue aside, the relevant question is whether Berkeley, when it was designated as the National Center complied with the statute. Again, the court erred in not distinguishing between an applicant and a grantee.

The same argument holds when the court finds that a director (and not co-directors) is required. (for further explanation see Argument 4)

The court goes even further afield on its treatment of the question of substantial contribution. The requirement there is not that "the university associated with the National Center is to provide a substantial financial contribution toward its establishment" (see page 15 of the court's decision, last paragraph) but that the University be prepared to make a substantial financial contribution. Clearly, the facts indisputably show that Berkeley was quite prepared and did make the necessary commitment of a substantial annual contribution, exceeding $600,000. Again, the court confuses requirements applicable to applicants and those applied to grantees.

Finally, it is important to note that none of the pertinent regulations which govern applicants and/or applications would disqualify Berkeley's application (see Federal Register, Vol. 50 No. 159, Friday, August 16, 1985, Rules and Regulations: Sections 417.2, 417.20, 417.30, 417.31). The distinction is quite clear in the regulations, some are for applicants (see above) and some are for the National Center (see Sections 417.40 et. seq.).

In sum, the court has badly confused the issue eligibility of the application with compliance of the Center. To be eligible for consideration, the application had to meet a few simple criteria. It had to come from a non-profit entity associated with a university prepared to make a substantial financial contribution. It had to address the major topics outlined by the Secretary in the regulations governing the competition. It had to be submitted on time. Berkeley satisfied all of these criteria. Before a grant is awarded, it is the responsibility of the government to ensure that the final award is in compliance with all relevant laws and regulations. The government not only has the right, it has the obligation to request changes that will ensure that the final award is in compliance. This is precisely what the government has done in this instance. It insisted on one director rather than a co-director. It insisted that there be no ambiguity that the center would operate as a single center. It insisted that Berkeley assume sole responsibility for making a substantial financial contribution rather than count the combined contributions of Berkeley and its subcontractors. It insisted on reviewing the language that would be used in the subcontractual agreements. Surely these are all proper, appropriate actions for the government to take.

The court, however, seems to think that 34 C.F.R. 75.109(b) prevents such changes from occurring once the deadline for submission of the application deadline for proposal submission has passed. 34 C.F.R. 75.109(b) reads:

An applicant may make changes to its application on or before the deadline date for submitting applications under the program.

Anyone familiar with the government procurement process knows that this section refers to changes initiated by the applicant. Prior to the deadline, an applicant may make any changes it wishes; after the deadline it may not initiate any changes on its own. It may, however, accede to requests by the government for changes. To rule that 75.109(b) prohibits any changes requested by the government completely destroys the power of the government to negotiate and ensure that the government obtains the best product for the best price in strict compliance with the law. To so rule effectively declares invalid every government contract and grant in place!

ARGUMENT 2 PRESUMPTION OF AGENCY REGULARITY (TO BE ADDRESSED BY AN ATTORNEY)

ARGUMENT 3 THE ISSUE OF A SINGLE CENTER

The Court accepts the plaintiff's contention that Berkeley proposed "to fund six regional centers" and that the proposal failed to comply with Congressional intent to establish a single national center with a critical mass of resources. This conclusion is a complete misreading of Berkeley's proposal. Berkeley proposed to marshal the resources of six of the country's leading research institutions into a single national center with a unified vision of the future of vocational education and a carefully crafted and well integrated agenda for research and service. What Congress has sought to avoid is the proliferation of independent centers that might duplicate efforts or work at cross purposes. The law is quite clear that it intended that the Center enter into subcontracts to accomplish the aims of the Center, and nowhere in law or regulation is there even the slightest suggestion that subcontractors must all be located in one single location. Rather it is the singleness of purpose, unity with respect to planning and coordination, and the avoidance of duplication that Congress has sought.

Berkeley's proposal unquestionably achieves these Congressional aims. The fact the review panel and the Department of Education judged Berkeley's proposal superior to that of Ohio State, despite Ohio State's years of experience in operating a center, is testimony to the power of Berkeley's proposal. Berkeley has not proposed, as the Court maintains, "to fund six regional centers." Nowhere has Berkeley proposed to mindlessly decentralize and replicate all the functions of the Center at branches throughout the country. On the contrary, Berkeley has proposed a unified national agenda for research and service and seeks to carry out that agenda by strategically locating special functions at those places that are among the best qualified in the nation to perform these tasks. Thus, primary responsibility for in-service training belongs to Virginia Polytechnic Institute, with one of the largest and most respected vocational education faculties in the country. Leadership development is housed at the University of Minnesota, which has a long history of experience with distinguished leadership institutes. Technical assistance for special populations is the primary responsibility of the University of Illinois, which leads the country in research on students with special needs. The research efforts take advantage of the unparalleled expertise of the Rand Corporation with survey research and quantitative methods, the pioneering work of Teachers College in the relationships between education and work, and the landmark efforts of the University of California in economic development, writing, and mathematics.

In short, Berkeley proposed a national center in the truest meaning of the word. It proposed a center that sought out the finest minds in the country and set them to work in a well coordinated, unified way on the major problems confronting vocational education. This is precisely what Congress sought; it wanted these resources amassed in a single center but not necessarily a single location. Indeed to insist on a single location is to ensure that Congress must settle for second best. It is simply not possible in a project of this scope and magnitude to assemble all the best talent in one geographic place. Surely Berkeley's strategy achieves the aims of Congress. The panel of experts reviewing the applications thought so, as did the Office of Vocational and Adult Education, the Secretary of Education, and the General Accounting Office. On what basis can the court reasonably rule otherwise?

ARGUMENT 4 THE ISSUE OF THE SINGLE DIRECTOR

Berkeley's proposal named Professors Charles Benson and Gordon Swanson as "Co-Principal Investigators". However, the proposal explicitly stated that "Professor Charles Benson is fiscally accountable to the U.S. Department of Education, the provider of funds and client, and this responsibility cannot be delegated or abridged." (Volume I, p. 178; emphasis supplied) It is plain that ultimate responsibility and authority were intended to rest with Professor Benson alone, and therefore all other employees of the National Center would be accountable to Professor Benson. The designation of others as co-principal investigators is traditional in universities, as a way to share credit for ideas which emerge from the interaction of many kinds. Designating Professor Swanson as co-principal investigator acknowledged his importance in the intellectual leadership of the National Center, but Professor Benson was clearly designated at the sole person at the top.

This was all in Berkeley's original proposal, submitted before the August 14 deadline. Subsequently, in the negotiation process, the Department asked Berkeley to change the titles given to Professors Benson and Swanson in order to make Professor Benson's sole leadership explicit in his title. Judge Smith cited testimony that this change of titles "did not change the substance at all". That is correct because Berkeley's original proposal had clearly named Professor Benson as the sole person responsible to the funding agency, with all other employees of the National Center, including Professor Swanson, to be accountable to him.

ARGUMENT 5 THE ISSUE OF A SUBSTANTAL FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTION

The Perkins Act states that the National Center shall be "a nonprofit entity associated with a public or private nonprofit university which is prepared to make a substantial financial contribution towards its establishment." This language is repeated in the language of the regulations describing who was eligible to apply. Judge Smith noted that neither the statute nor the regulations defined "substantial". However, he concluded that Berkeley's application was ineligible because, in negotiations after the August 14 deadline, the Secretary asked for a restructuring of Berkeley's contribution. In the restructuring, certain direct costs which were to have been paid by the subcontracting institutions would now be paid by Berkeley, so that the foregone overhead on these costs would be contributed by Berkeley instead of its subcontractors. The amount of contribution was not an issue, only the manner of accounting for it. This kind of technical adjustment happens routinely in negotiations over grants and contracts. It is erroneous to conclude that Berkeley's initial proposal was not eligible, since Berkeley clearly was prepared to make a substantial financial contribution one way or the other.

ARGUMENT 6 THE ISSUE OF THE FAILURE TO INCLUDE SUBCONTRACTS

The Court notes that Berkeley's proposal contained no subcontracts with each of the other five institutions with whom Berkeley intended to work. The Court maintains that the failure to include subcontracts violates 34 C.F.R. 75 128 (c). However, 34 C.F.R. 75 128 does not require submission of Subcontracts. 34 C.F.R. 75 128 reads as follows:

(a) If a group of eligible parties applies for a grant, the members of the group shall either—

(1) Designate one member of the group to apply for the grant; or

(2) Establish a separate, eligible legal entity to apply for the grant.

(b) The members of the group shall enter into an agreement that—

(1) Details the activities that each member of the group plans to perform; and

(2) Binds each member of the group to every statement and assurance made by the applicant in the application.

(c) The applicant shall submit the agreement with its application.

Berkeley complied fully with 34 C.F.R. 75.128. Berkeley was clearly identified as the prime contractor applying for the grant. The proposal clearly defined the activities to be performed by Berkeley and each of its subcontractors. It described the governance structure by which Berkeley and its subcontractors had agreed to work. It included letters from each of its subcontractors committing them to perform the work as outlined in the proposal for the amounts indicated in the budget. It also, in response to the Government's request for additional information provided a model subcontract pursuant to 34 C.F.R. 75.231. This is standard operating procedure for the government's procurement process. The applicant and its potential subcontractors commit themselves to perform the work as proposed. All parties are free to reconsider if during the process of negotiations the government requests changes. Formal subcontracts are then drawn up when the negotiation process has concluded. It is impossible, therefore, to include subcontracts with the initial application. The application must simply contain commitments to conduct the work as proposed. Berkeley's application contained committal letters from all of its subcontractors. It, therefore, was in full compliance with 34 C.F.R. 75.128.

ARGUMENT 7 THE ISSUE OF THE IMPORTANCE OF SPEEDY RESOLUTION

Any delay in the decision to award the grant for the National Center for Research in Vocational Education to the University of California at Berkeley will have serious and long-lasting consequences for the field of vocational education, for several reasons:

1. The Carl Perkins Act, which authorizes federal spending for vocational education and which has embodied federal policy on vocational education, expires in 1989. The reauthorization of the Perkins Act is a lengthy process involving serious discussions about the direction of federal policy. This process had already begun, and will continue into 1989. As part of its legislative mandate to "develop and provide information to facilitate national planning and policy development in vocational education", the National Center should participate in the discussions around reauthorization by providing its expertise and research capabilities to Congress and the Department of Education. In particular, the Center at this very moment should be responding to requests for data analysis from Congressional staff, the American Vocational Association, the Council of Chief State School Officers, and many other related organizations. However, if the award of the Center grant to Berkeley is delayed, these kinds of participation cannot take place—by either a National Center at Berkeley or a National Center at any other location—and policymakers will be denied access to important information that the Perkins Act specifically requires of the National Center. Furthermore, this acitivity cannot be carried out later, after a delayed start for the National Center, because the process of reauthorizing the Perkins Act has already begun and will not wait for a lengthy process of starting and completing a new competition of the National Center.

2. The elections of 1988 will bring substantial changes in political leadership, both in the executive branch as a new president takes office and in Congress. During 1988 and 1989, candidates and newly-elected politicans will be formulating positions on educational issues, since education has emerged as among the most important challenges facing our nation. As part of its general charge to provide research and information, as well as "information to facilitate national planning and policy development in vocational education", the National Center should legitimately provide information and research to newly-elected policy-makers as they begin to define their positions on educational matters. This process cannot take place if the start of the National Center is delayed. Like the participation of the National Center in the reauthorization of the Perkins Act, this kind of activity cannot readily be performed later, since the process of defining issues and positions is now actively underway.

3. The field of vocational education is ripe for change. The "excellence" movement of the past several years has thrown vocational education into disarray; but on the other hand the recognition has grown recently of how high dropout rates are and how inappropriate for many students the conventional academic curriculum is. The field of education is ready for new approaches to both academic and vocational education, and is now looking for leadership in this area. Any delay in beginning the National Center will interrupt the momentum that has been building for serious reform in the nation's system of vocational and academic education.

4. Any large and complex organization is subject to deterioration if it is not maintained. The University of California at Berkeley has assembled a team of nationally-prominent researchers and analysts to carry out the various missions of the National Center. If there is significant delay, the members of this team will drift off to other research, teaching, administrative, and policy positions, and the laborious process of assembling a Center will have to start again. This will further delay the ability of the National Center to engage in the research and dissemination activities which Congress has required under the Perkins Act.

5. If the grant to Berkeley for the National Center is vacated, the delay in beginning a National Center will be enormous. The judge's order to "begin anew the award process in strict compliance with 20 U.S.C. § 2404 and applicable regulations" refers to the Perkins Act, which requires the Department of Education to select a Center from "solicited applications". While this might mean that the Department should choose from applications already solicited, it certainly allows the Department to choose from among applications solicited anew. Beginning the process of awarding a grant from the beginning would require publishing notice in the Federal Register of the intended process; allowing a period for public comment; announcing planning grants; receiving applications for planning grants; awarding planning grants; allowing a period of time for planning grants; accepting final grants; going through a review procedure to choose among final applicants; and finally awarding a grant. The process of reviewing final applications could be expected to be much more thorough and therefore time-consuming this time around than the process just completed has been, as a way of avoiding still another lawsuit. This entire process consumed 18 months in the existing round of applications for a National Center; it could easily take this long or even longer if the Department of Education must "begin anew the award process". Thus the decision to vacate the designation of Berkeley as the National Center generates the prospect that there will not be a National Center until sometime in 1990.

It is important to note that such a delay will not only damage the institution that Berkeley has created to carry out the work of the National Center; it will also destroy the organization assembled at Ohio State University, where many people have already left and more will continue to do so. Thus delay demolishes any chance that an existing institution can speedily start the work of the National Center.

Mr. WILSON. The department is in the process of appealing this decision and oral arguments will be made in early June. I am confident that the court of appeals will overturn the Ohio District Court decision.

Mr. President, language has been included within H.R. 5, which although I believe sets a dangerous precedent, has become necessary in the face of a lengthy judicial proceeding. Until a final court decision is reached, Berkeley will be unable to negotiate contracts essential to the successful operation of the national center without taking a substantial financial risk.

Specifically, H.R. 5 includes provisions to allocate $2 million to Ohio State University and $2 million to Berkeley to operate separate vocational education research centers. This funding will relieve Berkeley of any financial liability incurred, and more importantly, much-needed vocational education research can continue.

I thank the Chair and the distinguished floor managers for allowing me the opportunity to address my colleagues on this matter and yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today is an important day for our country. We shall take final action on an omnibus bill, H.R. 5, the Hawkins-Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988. This bill, for 5 years reauthorizes many established Federal education programs and authorizes, for the first time, several new initiatives to meet current national education problems.

Education is not only the key to the future of our Nation's young people. Increasingly, it is also the key, in a technologically more complex and changing economy, to retaining opportunity for full participation in our society by older citizens as well.

I am most pleased that such an important bill as the School Improvement Amendments of 1988 is named for my good friend, ROBERT T. STAFFORD, the distinguished Senator from Vermont, who is retiring at the end of this session. His commitment to finding solutions for a broad range of national education needs over his many years of service in the Congress is properly recognized by the fact that we have named this bill after him. All of us who believe that a quality education is a fundamental component of our national well-being and security will miss him.

The children of our country should have a brighter tomorrow, a better future, as a result of many of the programs in this bill. Although the Federal taxpayer's dollar contributes only about six cents of every education dollar spent in this country, those six pennies are very important for serving groups or meeting national problems which, otherwise, would remain unserved or unaddressed. A good share of those six pennies will go to fund the programs authorized by this legislation.

Such programs, together with the care and dedication of parents and educators in implementing them, are very important for my own State of Utah. We are a small State, with a long tradition of a significant self-taxing effort to fund good educational programs. But we are hampered by the fact that the Federal Government owns nearly 70 percent of the land in our State. This drastically reduces our tax base. With one of the highest birthrates in the country, and many federally connected children residing within our borders, Utah has so many children in its schools that, despite our higher-than-average tax effort, Utah has the second lowest average per pupil expenditure in the United States. Federal programs—many old, some new—authorized by H.R. 5, the school improvement amendments, are an important supplement to Utah's own efforts. I wish to thank the many parents and educators and others in Utah who have taken the time to give me their advice on how to make these programs better serve the needs of Utah children and of children across this country.

Let me highlight for a few moments some of the important provisions of this omnibus bill. The chapter 1 program of remedial education for educationally and economically disadvantaged children must succeed. It served over 23,000 children in Utah last year. In today's world, it is critically important that our children develop the elementary skills of reading and writing if they are to have available to them the full range of opportunities which our Nation has to offer. Thus, I am pleased that this bill also contains a new basic skills remedial program targeted on secondary schools as well as some additional programs to help ensure that our students will stay in school and make the most of their education.

Another excellent education program which fosters high quality academic instruction has been expanded in these school improvement amendments. We have significantly increased the authorization of the magnet schools program to promote desegregation. We have also authorized a new alternative curriculum schools program to encourage integration and improve quality education throughout districts which have high concentrations of minority children. I hope that the original magnet schools program is sufficiently funded so that its worthy purposes may be more fully implemented. Also, if magnet schools are fully funded, we can begin funding the new alternative curriculum schools program. I believe this, too, is important. For, if we increase the quality of education offered throughout districts with high minority populations, we will not only be serving better those deserving children. We then may also be able to bring back into the public school system nonminority children currently attending private schools. This could be the key to across-the-board improvement in such localities. Thus, we must continue the old desegregation efforts under the original magnet schools program. But we should also recognize that there are further problems, to be solved in the years ahead, to make intregration a reality throughout this country. Our new alternative curriculum schools program can play an imporant part in that effort.

H.R. 5 also wisely increases the range of bilingual education programs which can recieve Federal funding. The greater flexibility for parents and educators to select instructional methods suited to local needs and circumstances can improve the education for one group which deserves special attention from the Federal Government, our limited-English-proficient children. I think it is most imporant to allow these children a greater chance to learn our common language. To be able to utilize the full range of opportunities of our common national life, these children need to learn English even while maintaining their own native language and cluture. We have learned in the last few years that school districts are eager to have this increased instructional flexibility. There have been far more applications than available Federal funds for alternative bilingual instruction programs—for special alternative programs—under the current law. For example, in 1985-86, there were three applications from Utah for funding a "special alternative language instruction program" under the Federal Bilingual Education Act. However, due, I believe, to the shortage of available funds under the existing 4-percent cap, not one of those proposals received Federal funding. This is regrettable. The change contained in these school improvement amendments will help remedy this inflexibility—an inflexibility, I might add, which only hurts these children who truly need this special assistance from the Federal Government.

Also reauthorized in these school improvement amendments is the Federal impact aid program, a program critically important to Utah because of the large numbers of federally connected children residing in our State. This bill reauthorizes both programs, for payments in lieu of taxes and for construction assistance. The testimony offered at the Education Subcommittee's field hearing in Farmington, UT, last August was most helpful in their reauthorization. Funding for "B" category students has been reaffirmed. And we have included another important new provision—up-front payment of the full handicapped portion of the entitlement for handicapped students. It is only fair that the Federal Government should bear a reasonable cost of educating federally connected children residing in our States, and that, with limited funds available, more assistance be provided to help defray the costs of the most expensive education.

I also believe that the prohibition on dial-a-porn now contained in this bill is critically important to the welfare of the children of this Nation. It seems only right and proper to me that at the same time we approve a range of positive programs to assist the children of this Nation we also face up to a problem which considerable evidence has shown is detrimental to their physical, intellectual, and moral well-being. If a so-called technological solution to the access of our children to dial-a-porn had been available, I, of course, would have supported it. However, I feared that the technological solution proposed after much long and careful work by many in both the House and the Senate had too many loopholes to make much of a dent in this problem. There are those who believe that the particular prohibition of telephone dial-a-porn, originally in the Senate bill and reinserted yesterday by the House of Representatives, is unconstitutional. If it is so held by the courts of this land, I shall work to enact one which meets constitutional muster. I bow to no one in my respect for the rights guaranteed by the first amendment. I also believe, however, that dial-a-porn has not been an exercise of rights in fact granted by that constitutional provision as well as being a force detrimental to the well-being of this Nation's young people.

To repeat, Mr. President, I belive there is much for us all to be proud of in these School Improvement Amendments of 1988. I would also like to thank my colleagues Senators PELL and STAFFORD, who have so ably guided this omnibus bill to its completion, and all my other colleagues on the Education Subcommittee and the Labor and Human Resources Committee who have worked so diligently on this bill. I look forward to continuing efforts with them, and with my other colleagues in the Senate and the House of Representatives, to serve the deserving children of our country with efficient and productive Federal education programs.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I join my colleagues today in expressing my support for H.R. 5, the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988.

This bill not only renews the Federal commitment to elementary and secondary education, but it also strengthens that role. New programs such as star schools, even start, and teacher training initiatives will provide students with opportunities never presented to them before.

The chapter 1 program is of vital importance to students in Mississippi. The renewal of this program will continue to benefit thousands who deserve a quality education. I have seen the work and the success of many chapter 1 programs in my State. Recently, Secretary Bennett recognized 123 school districts across the country which have been exemplary in the chapter 1 field. Two of my constituents, Bertrand Antoine of the Greenwood, MS, public schools and Robert McDaniel, of the Hazlehurst, MS public schools were both selected to receive this honor. They are examples of those coordinators who do make chapter 1 a successful program. I congratulate them and the many other coordinators across my State.

I congratulate my colleagues in both bodies who have so diligently worked on this bill, and I thank those members of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, with whom I had the pleasure of working on this effort.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am pleased that the House of Representatives has included language in this bill to ban interstate dial-a-porn. It has been a long- and hard-fought battle, but the American people have been heard: We, as a society, cannot and will not tolerate this smut on our telephone lines.

Mr. President, this result would never had occurred had it not been for the hard work of a number of people in the House of Representatives. Congressmen BILL DANNEMEYER and THOMAS BLILEY, in particular, have done yeomen's work on this issue and they deserve a lot of credit. Without their efforts, the ban on a dial-a-porn would never had come to fruition.

Mr. President, just as I suspected, some House Members tried to duck the real issue of dial-a-porn by claiming that banning dial-a-porn is unconstitutional. With all due respect to these gentlemen, I believe they are wrong.

I am not a lawyer, Mr. President, but it does not take a great deal of wisdom to see that lawyers and Federal judges have made a shambles of the traditional laws in our country banning obscene and indecent material. These laws were reasonable and had a long and honorable history. They kept at bay certain vile and base instincts of our fallen human nature for the good of individuals and society alike. Through these laws, decency and modesty and sound family life were promoted.

These laws, however, have been undercut by a patchwork quilt of confused and confusing Federal court rulings. It is an understatement to say that the precedents of the Supreme Court and other Federal courts on the subject of obscenity are more properly labeled constitutional chaos than constitutional law. The fact is that the first amendment and antiobscenity laws existed side by side, without serious conflict, for all of American history until the second half of this century.

Then, still having the same old Constitution but imbrued with a new liberal ideology, the Supreme Court started hacking away at traditional laws against smut. In short, the libertines of the ACLU combined with usurpers on the Federal bench set out to repeal decency in this country—all under the guise of constitutional law.

For the first time in the history of the Constitution antiporn laws had to pass elaborate and technical constitutional tests before they could be enforced. Not surprisingly, few laws could pass this new extra-constitutional muster. The philosopher/kings had finally arrived in America, and they sat in black robes on Federal court benches armed with new, radical ideas about the Constitution.

The results in 1988, Mr. President, are plain to see. The United States of America is now a society satiated with obscene, indecent, and pornographic materials. Not only are they available everywhere in the public domain, but thanks to the dial-a-porn industry, they are even available over the telephone of every home in America.

Mr. President, the patriots of the American Revolution and the framers of the Constitution did not sacrifice their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor so that a coterie of dial-a-porn operators and the phone companies could become millionaires in the 20th century. Our forefathers had higher ideals in mind. The great principles of freedom they put in the Constitution were meant to serve the common good, not the prurient interest.

Mr. President, I wish each and every Senator could have been with me the other day and could have seen what I saw. I attended a press conference with two parents whose families had been destroyed by dial-a-porn. One father, holding a picture of his precious 4-year-old daughter, told the story of how his daughter was coerced into engaging in sexual acts by a day-care provider's son after the son had listened to some 75 dial-a-porn messages. A mother told a similar story about how friends of her son raped her 10-year-old daughter after listening to 2½ hours of dial-a-porn.

Their pain is real, Mr. President. I am told that hundreds, if not thousands, of parents have experienced the same pain. Their children's innocence has been stolen by the porn kings and some phone companies for the sake of a buck.

In this Senator's opinion, the Constitution does not force Congress to sanction a dial-a-porn industry which corrupts the morals of children and pollutes the minds of adults. The Constitution is not a death wish reduced to writing. It does not require us to commit cultural suicide by tolerating vice and the cultivation of vice for profit.

Some Senators may state that protection for the porn kings may not be what our Founding Fathers wanted but the courts have tied their hands.

Nonsense, Mr. President. Citizens for Decency Through Law, Inc., has prepared a legal memorandum supporting the constitutionality of S. 212 which is identical to the dial-a-porn language currently contained in H.R. 5. I placed this memorandum in the Record on December 1 of last year and I am placing it in the Record again.

I will not take the Senate's time to read this lengthy brief. I emphasize, however, that the Supreme Court has never, I repeat, never said that it is unconstitutional to ban obscene and indecent dial-a-porn and I don't believe they will in the future.

The question here today, Mr. President, is not whether my amendment is unconstitutional—it clearly violates no provision of the Constitution—but whether we in Congress have the courage to stand up against the porn kings and smut peddlers and stand up for the American people and public morality.

I am happy to see that the House agrees with the Senate that interstate dial-a-porn should be banned. I urge swift adoption of H.R. 5.

I ask unanimous consent that the memorandum I mentioned earlier which was prepared by the legal staff of Citizens for Decency Through Law, Inc., appear in the Record.

I also ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Knights of Columbus supporting swift approval of H.R. 5, also be included in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Citizens for Decency Through Law—Memorandum of Law In Support of S. 212

This legislation proposes to amend Section 223 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. § 223), and as amended will prohibit obscene and indecent communications by means of telephone to any person, regardless of age. It is the purpose of this memorandum of law to demonstrate the need for this legislation, and to provide supporting legal authority for its enactment.

I. THIS HISTORY OF DIAL-A-PORN AND THE FAILURE OF PREVIOUS LEGISLATIVE EFFORTS

Today, any child in America can hear hardcore sexually explicit messages on the country's telephone system. These recorded and live so-called "dial-a-porn" messages contain graphic descriptions of ultimate sex acts, both heterosexual and homosexual, sado-masochism, of incest, bondage, and sex with animals. Attorneys representing this industry are admitting that dial-a-porn is openly available to children, but according to them: The exposure of this material to children is the price we must pay for a free society. Carlin Communications, Inc. et al., v. The Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Company, et al., CIV. 85-1420 (D. Ariz. 1985) (transcript of proceedings). In every major city across this country, dial-a-porn telephone services became readily accessible to children by mid-1985, with federal and state law enforcement agencies apparently unable or unwilling to stop it.

This dial-a-porn "industry" is still in its infancy, dating back to March of 1983. Yet, in less than four years, it has grown from only one service operating nationally from its New York headquarters, to many services operating in every major city. The messages continue to become more sexually explicit and deviant in their content.

When dial-a-porn first became available in March 1983, it should have been prosecuted under already existing federal law. 47 U.S.C. Section 223 of the Federal Code then provided: "(a) Whoever—(1) in the District of Columbia or in interstate or foreign communication by means of telephone—(A) makes any comment, request, suggestion or proposal which is obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, or indecent . . . shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than six months or both." Section 223, by its plain meaning, should have been used by the FCC and the Department of Justice (DOJ) to control dial-a-porn services. However, throughout 1983, the FCC and DOJ issued letters to one another and to the general public creating every possible excuse as to why Section 223 could not be enforced.

The FCC went on record as ruling: "Section 223(1)(A) applies only to persons who utter obscene or indecent words during calls they place." "Second Report and Order," Gen. Docket No. 83-989 (Oct. 16, 1985) (emphasis added). According to the FCC, since dial-a-porn dealers did not "place" the calls, Section 223 did not apply to them. This restrictive and erroneous interpretation given Section 223 by the FCC resulted in a lack of legal action taken against dial-a-porn during its first year of operation. The FCC refused to take administrative action, and the DOJ refused to take criminal or civil court action. Such lack of prosecution allowed the services to flourish. Meanwhile, the content of the messages became far more sexually explicit, moving from merely "indecent" suggestive language, to language which clearly fell within the restrictions of both state and federal obscenity legislation.

Congress became frustrated at the lack of legal action taken against dial-a-porn and, in late 1983, amended Section 223, making it a crime to make "any obscene or indecent communication for commercial purposes to any person under 18 years of age or to any other person without that person's consent." 47 U.S.C. Section 223(b)(1)(A) (emphasis added). In so amending Section 223, Congress "legalized" dial-a-porn. For the first time in the history of this country, obscene material was de-criminalized for "consenting adults." This legalization of obscene dial-a-porn messages for consenting adults directly violated legal precedent as established by the Supreme Court in cases such as Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49 (1973), which rejected the "consenting adults" defense.

In amending 223, Congress further provided that the FCC was to issue regulations which would deny access to dial-a-porn services to persons under 18 years of age. Compliance with these regulations would be a complete defense to liability under Section 223. In other words, even if a minor breaks through the restrictions and calls dial-a-porn, the dealer, having complied with FCC regulations, cannot be prosecuted.

Attempts by the FCC to issue regulations pursuant to § 223(b)(2) have been totally unsuccessful, and it is now clear that no regulations from the FCC will adequately protect children from these dial-a-porn services. The first set of FCC regulations, issued in 1984, was struck down as unconstitutional by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals. Carlin Communications, Inc. v. FCC, 749 F.2d 113 (2nd Cir. 1984). A second set of FCC regulations, issued on October 16, 1985, was also set aside by the Second Circuit Court. Carlin Communications, Inc. v. FCC, 787 F.2d 846 (2nd Cir. 1986).

The above described history reveals two major flaws in the 1983 amendments to Section 223 which have resulted in the failure to control dial-a-porn. First, legalizing dial-a-porn for "consenting adults" was contrary to the decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court and placed Section 223 in conflict with all other federal obsecenity statutes. Consequently, the legalization of dial-a-porn assured that it would always be accessible to children. The second major flaw in the 1983 legislation was to give the FCC the power to issue defenses to liability under § 223(b)(2)—the FCC has demonstrated its inability to issue workable regulations that will protect children.

Finally, as a result of the 1983 legislation and of the indecision by the FCC on this matter, the courts and the law enforcement community are in a state of confusion concerning the control and/or prosecution of dial-a-porn distributors. At the present time, federal prosecutors will not prosecute the distributors of obscene dial-a-porn messages, even where they have been made blatantly available to children. The reason for this lack of federal enforcement is the belief that dial-a-porn distributors can only be prosecuted under § 223(b) and under none of the other federal obscenity laws.[1] State law enforcement authorities will not prosecute because of the confusion in the federal arena, fear of legal action by the dial-a-porn industry against state officials, and a mistaken belief that the FCC has preempted this field of law. At the writing of this memorandum, there are no federal or state criminal cases pending against dial-a-porn distributors—they are operating freely, sensing a complete immunity from prosecution.

II. THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO 47 U.S.C. § 223 DOES NOT VIOLATE A DIAL-A-PORN RECIPIENT'S RIGHT TO PRIVACY OR RIGHT TO ACCESS

The first objection that may be leveled at this legislation is that it violates a customer's right to receive dial-a-porn messages. As will be shown, this criticism is without merit. It is well settled that obscenity, in whatever form, is not protected by the First Amendment. Miller v California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973); Kaplan v California, 413 U.S. 115 (1973). Hence, the states and federal government may lawfully prohibit its commercial distribution, whether telephonically or through other media. Id. The Supreme Court has made clear that the "mere private possession of obscene material" in the home cannot be made a crime. Stanley v Georgia, 394 U.S. 557 (1967). However, there is no correlative right to purchase obscenity in the public marketplace or to have it distributed to your house through channels of public commerce. In United States v 12 200-ft Reels, 413 U.S. 123 (1973), the Court held that the "right to possess obscene material in the privacy of one's home does not give rise to a correlative right to have someone sell or give it to others." 413 U.S. at 128. In so holding, the Court ruled that Stanley is to be viewed as "explicitly narrow and precisely delineated." 413 U.S. at 127. "We are not disposed to extend the precise, carefully limited holding of Stanley. . . ." 413 U.S. at 128. Indeed, the Court has squarely held that there is no right to "receive it" in "the privacy of the home." United States v Orito, 413 U.S. 139, 141 (1973) (emphasis added). In Orito, the Court further held that there is no right to use "common carriers in interstate commerce" (such as the telephone company) for delivery of obscene material to the home. 413 U.S. at 142. See also, United States v Reidel, 402 U.S. 351, 353-54 (1971) (there is no right to deliver obscene material for use in the home.)

Furthermore, the Supreme Court in FCC v Pacifica Foundation, 438 U.S. 726 (1978), held, inter alia, that radio and television do not have the right to "broadcast" "indecent" material into the home. The Court rejected the contention that an individual has a right of access in the privacy of his home to "indecent" radio or television broadcasts. The Court reasoned that such broadcasts are "uniquely accessible to children" and "that the governments interest in the 'well-being of its youth' justified the regulation of otherwise protected speech." 438 U.S. at 749. This government interest in the "well-being of its youth" and the "accessibil[ity] to children" are similarly present, and are triggered, upon the transmission of "indecent" or "obscene" dial-a-porn into the home. As the Court stated: "[T]he ease with which children may obtain access . . . , coupled with the concerns [for children] recognized in Ginsberg, amply justify special treatment of indecent" material. 438 U.S. at 250.

Assuming arguendo that exposure of dial-a-porn to children can be prevented, the Supreme Court has rejected the contention that the distribution or transmission of obscene materials between consenting adults is constitutionally sanctioned. In Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49 (1973), the Court held that notwithstanding lack of exposure to children, the distribution of obscene material between consenting adults could be regulated: We categorically disapprove the theory . . . that obscene, pornographic films acquire constitutional immunity from state regulation simply because they are exhibited for consenting adults only . . . [W]e hold that there are legitimate state interests at stake in stemming the tide of commercialized obscenity, even assuming it is feasible to enforce effective safeguards against exposure to juveniles and to passerby. Rights and interests other than those of the advocates are involved. 413 U.S. at 57. This holding squarely does away with any contention that "consenting adults" have a right to transmit or receive obscene dial-a-porn. It should again be stressed, however, that many dial-a-porn distributors have openly made their "product" available to children and have refused to acknowledge any responsibility for excluding children's access.

The products of the dial-a-porn industry are clearly not protected by a constitutional right of privacy. These messages are being publicly distributed and have become openly available to children through channels of public commerce. Because of the complete public and commercial nature of this dial-a-porn industry, regulation under Section 223 is clearly permissible.

III. THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT MAY LAWFULLY PROHIBIT THE TRANSMISSION OF OBSCENE AND INDECENT DIAL-A-PORN.

A. Obscene Dial-A-Porn

Without question, obscene speech is not protected by the First Amendment. Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. , 86 L.Ed.2d 394, 105 S.Ct. (1985); Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973). Hence, the government may lawfully prohibit its distribution, whether telephonically or through other media. Kaplan v. California, 413 U.S. 115 (1973). See also, United States v. Lampley, 573 F.2d 783, 50 A.L.R. Fed. 525 (3rd Cir. 1978) (upholding constitutionality of 47 U.S.C. § 223). This issue is so well settled that there has been no serious claim to date that the Congress may not constitutionally prohibit "obscene" dial-a-porn.

B. Indecent Dial-A-Porn

The more frequently repeated assertion is that Congress may not legislate against "indecent" dial-a-porn. This assertion is erroneous and ignores sound legal precedents permitting the use of the "indecency" standard for the telephone medium. These precedents and authority are set forth herein.

In its landmark case of F.C.C. v. Pacifica Foundation, 438 U.S. 726 (1978), the Supreme Court defined the word "indecent" as "nonconformance with accepted standards of morality." It is a "shorthand term for patent offensiveness." Id., at 470 n. 15. This definition obviously does not coincide with the three-part definition of "obscenity" found in Miller v. California. Yet, the Supreme Court has never limited government restrictions on speech to the obscenity standard.[2] For example, the Court has upheld restrictions on all of the following types of speech: false advertising, speaking a prayer in a public school, libel, slander, speaking words which amount to a conspiracy or an obstruction of justice, sedition, yelling fire in a crowded theatre, using words which constitute offering a bribe, words that threaten social harm because they advocate illegal acts, words (from a loudspeaker) at 3:00 a.m. in a residential neighborhood, speaking in contempt of court, committing perjury under oath, television cigarette advertisements, saying words which have been classified (e.g., secret) by the government, copyright violations, pretrial publicity which might interfere with a defendant's opportunity to secure a fair trial, U.S. government employees engaging in political speech (Hatch Act), sexually explicit material which is harmful to minors, non-obscene sexually explicit movies shown in violation of a zoning ordinance, child pornography, and finally, "indecent" speech.[3] Thus, the broad contention that government restrictions on expression are limited to the obscenity standard are quite incorrect. Regulation of sexually-oriented expression has by no means been limited to that standard, although the degree of permissible regulation has varied with the circumstances.

[1] Federal criminal charges were dismissed in 1985 in Utah, where numerous children had been exposed to the dial-a-porn services. Because § 223(b) is in a state of confusion, the U.S. Attorney attempted to prosecute Carlin Communications and others for violations of other federal obscenity laws. However, the Judge dismissed the indictments, ruling that violations could only be prosecuted under § 223(b). U.S. v. Carlin Communications, Inc., et al., No. CR-85-00086G (D. Utah 1985).

[2] In its unamended pre-1983 form, § 223 prohibited the use of the telephone to make "any comment, request, suggestion or proposal which is obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, or indecent . . ." 47 U.S.C. § 223 (a)(1))A). This precise language was upheld as constitutional in United States v. Lampley, 573 F. 2d 783, (3rd Cir. 1978). Hence, the prohibitions on "indecent" telephone language in § 223 has already passed constitutional muster.

The application of the "indecency" standard to dial-a-porn is supported by the Supreme Court's analysis of the First Amendment, which accords some varieties of speech (i.g., "indecent" speech) less protection than others.[4] The Supreme Court's rulings that certain types of expression are entitled to little or no protection under the First Amendment find their modern beginnings with Chaplinski v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568 (1942), where the Court upheld a "fighting words" statute under which Chaplinski had been convicted for calling a policeman "a God damned racketeer" and a "damned fascist." Id. at 569. Justice Murphy's rationale for upholding the statute against a First Amendment attack is set forth in the following excerpt from the opinion:

There are certain well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any Constitutional problem. These include the lewd and obscene, the profane, the libelous, and the insulting or "fighting" words—those which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace. It has been well observed that such utterances are no essential part of any exposition of ideas, and are of such slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality. Id. at 571-72. The Supreme Court has embraced the position that differing degrees of protection are afforded different classes of speech. Speech protected in some contexts may in others be so harmful, or of so little value, that it can be regulated because the harm to society outweighs the expressive interests. Thus, First Amendment protection "often depends on the content of the speech." Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 66 (1976). Furthermore, as Justice Stevens has stated, "the First Amendment affords some forms of speech more protection from governmental regulation than other forms of speech," New York v. Ferber, 102 S.Ct. 3348, 3367 (1982) (Stevens, J. concurring), and the context of speech may determine whether or not it is protected. F.C.C. v. Pacifica Foundation, supra, at 747-48 (1978). The Court has allowed government regulation of non-obscene speech, based upon subject matter and context in numerous cases. See, Rowan v. Post Office Department, 397 U.S. 728 (1970) (banning erotic material from the mails at recipient request); C.B.S. v. Democratic National Committee, 412 U.S. 94 (1973) (upholding network refusal to accept commercial advertising); Lehman v. Shaker Heights, 418 U.S. 298 (1974) (upholding policy of accepting commercial advertising but refusing political advertisements on city-owned bus line); Greer v. Spock, 424 U.S. 828 (1976) (barring political speakers from a military base); Jones v. North Carolina Prisoners Union, 433 U.S. 119 (1977) banning in-prison solicitation of membership in a prisoners union); Young v. American Mini Theatres, supra, and Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., U.S. , 89 L.Ed.2d 29, 106 S.Ct. (1986) (placing zoning restrictions on the location of adult theatres); F.C.C. v. Pacifica, supra, (prohibiting radio broadcast of indecent programming); Board of Education v. Pico, 457 U.S. 853 (1982) (certain books may be removed from a high school library because of their vulgarity); New York v. Ferber, supra, (banning non-obscene sexually explicit depictions of minors); Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629 (1968) (banning distribution to minors of non-obscene material which is "harmful to minors"); Bethel School District No. 403 v. Fraser, 478 U.S. , 92 L.Ed.2d 549, 106 S.Ct. (1986) (upheld restriction on indecent sexually suggestive language in a political speech by high school student); City of Newport v. Iacobucci, 479 U.S. , 93 L.Ed.2d 334, 107 S.Ct. (1986) (upheld city ordinance banning non-obscene nude or nearly nude dancing in bars).

It is important to recognize that laws restricting "indecent" or "obscene" speech are not directed at a particular viewpoint. They proscribe only the mode or form of expression, not any ideas the "indecent" language or pictures may purport to convey. If the speaker is concerned with ideas, he can escape the penalty by expressing them in some other form. The Court has recognized that content is separable from form and that other modes of expression are virtually always available. Restrictions on "indecent" or "obscene" speech do not preclude advocacy of any ideas such speech might otherwise convey. For example, prohibitions on "indecent" telephone recordings may be compared with a lawyer who, in open court, addresses the judge in "indecent" terms. Rules against that sort of speech will undoubtedly be enforced by the judge (holding lawyer in contempt). The Court recognizes that other more acceptable means of objecting to the judge are available and the lawyer must use them. As the Court stated in Pacifica: A requirement that indecent language be avoided will have its primary effect on the form, rather than the content, of serious communications. There are few, if any, thoughts that cannot be expressed by the use of less offensive language. . . . At most . . . [i]t will deter only . . . patently offensive references to excretory and sexual organs and activities. . . . [T]hey surely lie at the periphery of First Amendment concerns. 438 U.S. at 473 n.18.

Since March of 1983, when dial-a-porn was first commercially marketed, countless children have been exposed to it. It constitutes an attractive nuisance in every home in America where children are present. There is no completely effective way to prevent children from being exposed to "indecent" or "obscene" dial-a-porn so long as it is lawfully and commercially marketed. Make no mistake, dial-a-porn providers care little whether a caller is a child of 9 or an adult of 19—their motive is profit. Children are being injured every day through "indecent" dial-a-porn.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that where the interests of children are at stake the government is fully justified in regulating non-obscene material. This significant governmental interest in the protection of minors has been identified in a number of cases. See, Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 168 (1944)("[a] democratic society rests, for its continuance, upon the healthy, well-rounded growth of young people into full maturity as citizens"); New York v. Ferber, supra, 756-57 ("a states interest in 'safeguarding the physical and psychological well-being of a minor'" is "compelling" and justifies banning non-obscene sexually explicit depictions of minors); F.C.C. v. Pacifica, supra, 749 (government interest in the "well-being of its youth" sufficient to ban all indecent broadcasting to children, as well as adults).

In Ginsberg v. New York, supra, the Supreme Court upheld a ban on the distribution of non-obscene sexually explicit material to children. The prohibition on distribution of such "indecent"[5] material to children is supported by the exact same interest present when "indecent" dial-a-porn is exposed to children. The "governments interest in the 'well-being of its youth' and in supporting 'parents' claim to authority in their own household justified the regulation of otherwise protected expression." Pacifica, supra, at 749; Ginsberg, supra, at 639-40. The Court in Ginsberg elaborated on these compelling interests. There were two governmental interests which justified limitations on the availability of sexually explicit ("indecent") material to children. First, the Court noted that "constitutional interpretation has consistently recognized that the parents claim to authority in their household to direct the rearing of their children is basic in the structure of our society," and that parents and others responsible for children's well-being "are entitled to the support of laws designed to aid discharge of that responsibility." Id., at 639. Second, the Court stated that "government has an independent interest in the well-being of its youth." Id., at 640. The Court declared that:

While the supervision of children's reading may best be left to their parents, the knowledge that parental control or guidance cannot always be provided and society's transcendent interest in protecting the welfare of children justify reasonable regulation of the sale of material to them. It is, therefore, altogether fitting and proper for a state to include in a statute designed to regulate the sale of pornography to children special standards, broader than those embodied in legislation aimed at controlling dissemination of such material to adults. Id. Indeed, Justice Stewart, in his concurring opinion in Ginsberg, at 649-50, provided an additional theoretical justification for stricter regulation of dissemination of sexually explicit "indecent" material to minors:

I think a State may possibly determine that, at least in some precisely delineated areas, a child—like someone in a captive audience—is not possessed of that full capacity for individual choice which is the presupposition of First Amendment guarantees. As the Court more recently stated, the government's interest in "safeguarding the physical and psychological well-being of a minor" is "compelling." New York v. Ferber, supra, at 756-57 (emphasis supplied).

Today, children are suffering injury through exposure to sexually explicit "indecent" dial-a-porn. Thus, "society's right to adopt more stringent controls on communicative materials available to youths than on those [only] available to adults" is well established. Pacifica, supra, at 757 (Powell, J. concurring) (quoting Erznoznik v. Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 212 (1975)); See also, Miller v. California, supra, at 36 n. 17; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. Dallas, 390 U.S. 676, 690 (1968); Jacobellis v. Ohio, 378 U.S. 184, 195 (1964). No member of the present Court has dissented from this principle. Indeed, in the recent case, Bethel School District No. 403 v. Fraser, 478 U.S. , 92 L.Ed.2d 549, 106 S.Ct. (1986), the Court made emphatic the government's ability to ban sexually indecent speech to children even in the context of a political speech. The Court emphasized that bans on indecent speech have been upheld repeatedly where the welfare of children was at issue. Citing Thomas Jefferson, the Court stated:

> The Manual of Parliamentary Practice, drafted by Thomas Jefferson and adopted by the House of Representatives to govern proceedings in that body, prohibits the use of 'impertinent' speech during debate and likewise provides that '[n]o persons is to use indecent language against the proceedings of the House. Jefferson's Manual of Parliamentary Practice, §§ 359, 360, reprinted in Manual and Rules of the House of Representatives, HR Doc. No. 97-271, pp. 158-159 (1982). 92 L.Ed.2d at 557 (emphasis added).

In banning "indecent" speech in the schools, the Court thus noted that Congress itself bans "indecent" speech during congressional proceedings.

The governmental right to restrict access to non-obscene but "indecent" material even to adults, when it is sufficiently harmful to children, is a key part of the Court's rationale in the landmark F.C.C. v. Pacifica Foundation case.[6] Radio and television broadcasting, like the telephone, is "uniquely accessible to children." Id., at 749.

The Court's willingness to deny access to non-obscene material to adults when children would otherwise be harmed was demonstrated in Board of Education v. Pico, 457 U.S. 853 (1982). In Pico, the Court remanded with instructions for the lower court to determine whether improper motivations had tainted the Board's removal of certain books from a high school library. The First Amendment would be offended if the court found the books had been removed with intent "to deny respondents access to ideas with which petitioners disagreed." Id., at 872. On the other hand, "an unconstitutional motivation would not be demonstrated if it were shown that petitioners had decided to remove the books at issue because those books were pervasively vulgar." Id., at 871 (emphasis supplied). Pico identifies another context in which government may restrict dissemination of indecent materials to children, as well as adults.

Probably the most frequently cited case in opposition to the use of an "indecency" standard is Butler v. Michigan, 352 U.S. 30 (1957), with its oft-quoted assertion that the government may not "reduce the adult population . . . to reading only what is fit for children." Id., at 383. In a brief opinion the Court struck down a criminal conviction under a manifestly overbroad Michigan statute that forbade the publication, sale or other distribution of any publication, writing, picture: or other thing, including any recordings, containing obscene, immoral, lewd or lascivious prints, pictures, figures or descriptions, tending to incite minors to violent or depraved or immoral acts, manifestly tending to the corruption of the morals of youth . . . Id., at 381. The Court correctly ruled that the law was overbroad and "not reasonably restricted to the evil with which it is said to deal." Id., at 383. It is significant to note that Michigan had another statute specifically proscribing the distribution of erotic materials to minors, but that statute was not before the Court. Id.

The more recent Pacifica Court limited the Butler case by distinguishing it. In a real sense, of course, Pacifica bans the broadcast of "indecent" material to adults as well as children. However, the Court ruled that unlike Butler, the F.C.C. order did not "reduce adults to hearing only what is fit for children" because adults "may purchase tapes and records to go to theatres and nightclubs to hear these words." Pacifica, supra, at 750 n. 28; and See, Powell, J. (concurring) at 760 ("the Commissions holding does not prevent willing adults from purchasing Carlins ["indecent"] records, from attending his performances, or, indeed, from reading the transcript reprinted as an appendix to the Courts opinion"). Clearly, this analysis is squarely applicable to "indecent" recordings heard over the telephone. They are easily available to adults from other sources and their removal from the telephone (where they are exposed to children) would not "reduce adults to hearing only what is fit for children." Indeed, the Court itself analogized "indecent" broadcasting with "indecent" telephone language, stating that neither is given "constitutional immunity" to "avoid a harm that has . . . taken place." Id., at 749. The Court cited as justification for its holding the need for newly enacted Congressional legislation against "obscene or profane" telephone language. Id., at n. 27.

One must remember that the Butler statute prohibited the distribution of all material "unsuitable" for minors no matter what the source or media. It made it impossible for adults to obtain the material anywhere. As in Pacifica, the dial-a-porn prohibition would deal only with one medium which is uniquely hurtful to children. As Justice Powell stated in his Pacifica concurrence:

> In most instances, the dissemination of this kind of degrading speech to children may be limited without also limiting willing adults access to it. Sellers of printed and recorded matter and exhibitors of motion pictures and live performances may be required to shut their doors to children, but such a requirement has no effect on adults access . . . The difficulty is that such a physical separation of the audience cannot be accomplished in the broadcast [or telephone] media. . . . [B]oth adults and unsupervised children are likely to be in the broadcast or [dial-a-porn] audience, and the broadcaster [or provider] cannot reach willing adults without also reaching children. Id., at 758-59 (Powell, J. concurring). Justice Powell went on to state that "[t]his, as the Court emphasizes, is one of the distinctions between" such media and others "justifying a different treatment . . . for First Amendment purposes." Id.

As in Pacifica, the prohibition of "indecent" dial-a-porn involves a limited form of regulation of a single medium whose adult and youth audiences cannot be physically separated. Butler, on the other hand, applied to all media and embraced a wide-ranging (and vaguely defined) subject matter. Moreover in Butler, dissemination of the materials to children could generally be controlled at the point of distribution without denying access to willing adults. This is impossible with broadcast radio (as in Pacifica) and dial-a-porn.

Indeed, the very facts present in Butler limit it to the situation wherein the distributor of "indecent" material can differentiate between adults and children. This obviously cannot be done when the child telephones a tape-recorded message. Clearly, the ruling that better applies to dial-a-porn is Pacifica. Telephones are precisely like radio and television because of their easy accessibility to children and the virtual impossibility for parents to monitor their use.[7]

The Court in Pacifica also reasoned that "broadcast media" has a pervasive presence in the lives of all Americans. "Patently offensive, indecent material presented over" such a pervasive media "confronts the citizens . . . in the privacy of the home, where the individuals right to be left alone plainly outweighs the First Amendment rights of an intruder." Id., at 748 (citing Rowan v. Post Office Dept., supra, banning erotic material from the mails at recipients request). This analysis is squarely applicable to dial-a-porn. It is of the utmost importance to be cognizant that dial-a-porn is presently in the home whether the homeowner wants it or not. Today one cannot have telephone service in the privacy of one's family environment without being required to have dial-a-porn with it. Families with children must give up telephone service to be "left alone" from exposure of their children to this "intruder." Is there really a medium more "pervasive" than the telephone? We know that children (especially teens) spend countless hours on the telephone. At present, no family can be left alone in their own homes without the harmful nuisance of indecent or obscene dial-a-porn.[8]

[6] The Court also rested its holding on the "pervasiveness" of the medium which carries the "indecent" material to children, discussed infra. 438 U.S. at 748.

[7] Also, one cannot discount the fact that Pacifica in 1978 is the most recent expression of the Supreme Court's will. No member of the 1957 Butler Court remains on the Supreme Court bench. Indeed, Justice Stewart, who dissented in Pacifica, is no longer a member of the Court.

[8] Recently the Supreme Court affirmed the case Jones v. Wilkinson, 800 F.2d 989 (10th Cir. 1986), aff'd. U.S. (March 23, 1987). There the 10th Circuit held that the federal Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984, 47 U.S.C. § 521-559, had preempted the states from regulating "indecent" cable programming. 800 F.2d at 990-91. Contrary to many published media accounts of this case, the issue here was "preemption" by the federal government, not the constitutionality of the "indecency" standard. Still, it is pertinent to point out that a family can have non-cable broadcast television in their home if they choose. They cannot have a telephone in their home without dial-a-porn. Unlike television, the telephone choice is either no telephone or dial-a-porn. Indeed, since deregulation of cable, many companies are competing for the same customers. The telephone subscriber has only one

Further, an argument can be made that because the telephone system is a regulated and protected system serving such a vital public function, it should be held to a higher standard of conduct than, say, a newspaper. In essence, the telephone system carries out the government function of providing telephone communication to all citizens who choose to have it at a rate set by governmental regulatory bodies. They are given de facto monopoly protection by the government and often use publicly owned property to carry out their business. In return for such privileged status, the telephone system has a public trust. The trust is breached when the telephone system enters the pornography business by exposing "indecent" dial-a-porn to virtually every child in America. Cf., United Church of Christ v. F.C.C., 359 F.2d 994, 1003 (D.C. Cir. 1966) (opinion authored by Chief Justice Burger, then a member of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals).

IV. UNDER 47 U.S.C. § 223(B)(5), THE ATTORNEY GENERAL MAY LAWFULLY ENJOIN TRANSMISSION OF DIAL-A-PORN WHICH VIOLATES § 223(B)(1)(A) OR (1)(B)

Without question, the government may lawfully restrain a party's violation of an obscenity statute through the use of a civil injunction proceeding, as permitted by 47 U.S.C. § 223(b)(5). Such a procedure, whereby the government files a civil action petitioning the court to issue an injunction against the future distribution of specifically named or identified materials has been categorically approved by the Supreme Court. Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 50-55 (1973); Kingsley Books v. Brown, 354 U.S. 436, 441 (1956). The holdings of Paris Adult Theatre and Kingsley Books are clearly applicable to § 223(b)(5) and permit the Attorney General to proceed against violations of this statute by injunction.

The Supreme Court has set forth the guidelines for such an injunction proceeding in several cases. Specifically, the Court has held such a proceeding is constitutionally permissible when, as here, the burden of proof and of initiating the judicial review is the governments, and the dial-a-porn provider is allowed to transmit pending a full adversary judicial proceeding, with a prompt final judicial review available. Paris Adult Theatre, 413 U.S. at 55; and see Blount v. Rizzi, 400 U.S. 410 (1971); Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51 (1965). Subsection 223(b)(5) is fully supported by authority of the Supreme Court.

V. CONCLUSION

It has been demonstrated that the open availability of dial-a-porn is a serious problem for adults, as well as children. It has further been demonstrated that attempts to regulate dial-a-porn have been a complete failure since the start of this "industry" in 1983. This present situation can only be corrected if the present legislation is enacted by Congress. The legislation will obviously receive vigorous opposition from the dial-a-porn businesses themselves—this is to be expected since they stand to lose millions of dollars if an enforceable § 223 is enacted. However, this memorandum of law has clearly shown that § 223 as amended is firmly supported by legal precedent, and by a tradition for the protection of children from this type of harm. In conclusion, there is no legal obstacle to the passage of this legislation by Congress, and its enactment will finally allow for the regulation of this dial-a-porn industry and its often "illegal" product.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS,
Washington, DC, April 20, 1988.
Hon. JESSE HELMS,
403 Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HELMS: The 1.4 million members of the Knights of Columbus and their families strongly support your efforts and those of our colleagues to enact into law the Dial-A-Porn amendment to H.R. 5. In our view the overwhelming vote in the House last night as well as the earlier unanimous vote in the Senate reflects not only the broad bi-partisan support in Congress for this measure, but its widespread support among the American people. We urge the Senate to approve this measure without delay.

We just as strongly oppose any parliamentary maneuver which would create the illusion of progress on this needed reform while in reality resigning it to inaction for the remainder of this Congress.

As you know, the Knights of Columbus remain steadfastly committed to the welfare of America's families, especially when the moral health of or nation's children is endangered. As the Supreme Knight, Virgil Dechant, recently stated, "The cynical entrepreneures responsible for the rise of pornography-for-profit have already done grave injury to countless individuals and to the fabric of society itself."

Again thank you for your efforts in this matter.

With kindest regards,

CARL A. ANDERSON,
Vice President for Public Policy.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report regarding the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert R. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988. This bill, which has been worked out by the House/Senate conferees, will enhance the Federal effort to aid preschool, elementary, secondary, and adult education programs.

The bill is a prudent investment in the future of our Nation. It reaffirms the important role the Federal Government plays in supporting efforts by teachers, principals, administrators, and members of school boards to educate our children to become the future workers, artists, and leaders of our country. It also recognizes the central role parents play in educating their children.

I am particularly pleased that this bill contains numerous substantive provisions that address the unique needs of children residing in rural America. For example, the bill includes the provisions of S. 1778, the Rural Education Opportunities Act, which I introduced on October 8, 1987. This bill authorizes the Department of Education to establish technical assistance centers that will focus exclusively on the needs of rural school districts. These centers will provide evaluation assistance, consultation, and training aimed at helping local school districts improve the quality of the education provided to educationally deprived children participating in chapter 1 programs who reside in rural areas or attend small school.

Although I am pleased with the substantive provisions concerning rural areas included in the bill, I am, quite frankly, extremely distressed and disappointed that the Senate receded to the House on the chapter 1 concentration formula. The concentration formula included in the Senate bill was developed after many hours of work. It reflected the proper balance among regional urban/rural and State interests. As the Senate report states:

> The committee believes that such a balance has been struck with this compromise approach.

During the conference, it was recognized by virtually all Senators and Congressmen that the Senate version provided more funds than the House version to those school districts in greatest need of extra assistance, which after all is the purpose of this provision. For example, under the Senate version, Chicago would receive $19.7 million; in contrast, under the House version Chicago would only receive $15.8 million. Similarly, under the Senate version the entire State of Iowa would receive $2.3 million; in contrast under the House version the State would only receive $1.1 million.

Notwithstanding my disappointment with the concentration formula, I do support this bill. I am especially proud of my committee's resolve to reaffirm our commitment to assist school districts meet the special needs of our educationally disadvantaged children residing in poor areas; to strengthen our resolve to address the problems of illiteracy and dropouts; and to expand our resolve to address the needs of our preschool population.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on the Handicapped, I am also pleased with the numerous provisions included in the bill providing special focus on the needs of children and youth with handicaps. For example, the Jacob K. Javits Gifted and Talented Students Education Act of 1988 specifies that in the administration of the program the Secretary must give the highest priority for, among other things, the identification of gifted and talented students who may not be identified through traditional assessment methods such as individuals with handicaps and to conduct programs for such children.

In addition, the amendments to chapter 2, the Education Block Grant, provide a greater degree of targeting on at-risk students and students for whom providing an education entails higher than average costs, which include among others, handicapped students. Additional FOCI of chapter 2 are programs of acquisition and use of instructional and educational materials—for example, library books—and other innovative projects that would enhance the educational programs of the school—for example technology. Captioning for the hearing impaired certainly qualifies as a technology that may be used in innovative ways to enhance literacy.

Furthermore, the fund for the Improvement and Reform of Schools and Teaching Act authorizes the Secretary of Education to make grants and enter into contracts designed to improve educational opportunities for and the performance of elementary and secondary school students and teachers by, among other things, helping at risk children meet higher educational standards and providing incentives for improved performance. The term "at risk" children certainly includes handicapped children.

The need to look beyond access for handicapped children to high quality instruction designed to maximize a handicapped child's potential was one of the major recommendations of a recent congressionally mandated report entitled "Toward Equality—Education of the Deaf" prepared by the Commission on Education of the Deaf. The recommendations of the Commission should be given serious consideration and be made applicable to all handicapped children.

The amendments to the State-operated program for the handicapped, also known as Public Law 89-313, which I developed with Senator STAFFORD, will go a long way toward ensuring that handicapped children in a State participating in Public Law 89-313 programs receive a free appropriate public education in accordance with all of the applicable provisions in part B of the Education of the Handicapped Act. It also reaffirms the appropriateness of using Public Law 89-313 funds to provide early intervention services for handicapped infants and toddlers, consistent with the provisions of part H.

In closing, I believe that the bill will enhance our children's educational opportunities and our Nation's future prosperity.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 5, aptly named the Augustus F. Hawkins and Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988. This omnibus legislation extends and improves a range of important Federal programs which support elementary and secondary education. It also includes several new initiatives to address such vital areas of national concern as high school dropouts and adult illiteracy. This important measure represents the kind of Federal commitment we need to promote excellence in our schools and to ensure that all our Nation's students have access to a quality education.

Chapter I is the largest program of Federal aid to elementary and secondary education. This legislation will improve chapter I in several important ways. The bill encourages additional appropriations each year so that all eligible children can be served by 1993, and concentrates additional funding on the neediest school districts. It also includes a new program for preschool children and provisions which will help schools to provide basic skills training for secondary students and to prevent students from dropping out.

I am particularly pleased that the conference report includes my amendments to encourage parental involvement in the chapter I program. These amendments, along with the other strong parental involvement provisions in the bill, will provide parents with a whole range of opportunities to learn about and participate in the program, so that parents and educators can work together to ensure that children in the program will succeed in school.

The legislation will also continue support for other important education programs, including the chapter II block grant, impact aid, magnet schools, science and math programs, and the Adult Education Act. In addition, the conference report provides for several new initiatives that address some very critical areas. New programs will focus on preventing high school dropouts, improving the basic skills of at-risk secondary students, providing help for illiterate adults, and enhancing programs for the education of gifted and talented children.

I am also appreciative that the other conferees agreed to include my proposal providing $2 million to support the National Center for Research in Vocational Education at the Ohio State University through the end of the year. These funds will allow the center to continue operating until a new grant competition can be held to determine the final recipient of the 5-year grant award. This will save jobs and permit the center to continue providing important services to vocational educators nationwide.

Mr. President, this legislation will help our schools to provide the best possible education for all our children. It represents a wise investment in the future of our Nation, and I urge my colleagues to support the conference report.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I want to join my distinguished colleagues, the senior Senator from Rhode Island, who chairs the Subcommittee on Education, Arts and Humanities, and the senior Senator from Vermont who serves as our ranking Republican member. Both have served the cause of education well over the years and 1987-88 is no exception. And 1988 is a year in which many who have been strangers to the sanctuary of education have come to pledge their commitment and offer sacrifices on the educational altar in an election year. Not true with Senators PELL and STAFFORD. Steadfast in their support and consciencious in their commitment to the cause of academic excellence, educational equity, and equal opportunity, they are not new converts now that it has become fashionable to support education in our Nation.

I especially want to acknowledge the outstanding work on this bill and on many other pieces of education legislation of my friend BOB STAFFORD, who will be retiring from this body at the end of the 100th Congress. In fact, many of us would not even have most of the existing Federal education program if it were not for BOB STAFFORD and the work he did in 1981 to preserve many of these vital programs from the budget ax of the Reagan administration. Although they have recently "found religion"—recommending a total education department budget of $21.2 billion or $851 million above the fiscal year 1988 appropriations level. We will lose a real trooper, an accomplished public servant, and an acknowledged leader in the field of education.

Mr. President, I want to say only a few words about H.R. 5, the Hawkins-Stafford School Improvement Act.

EFFECTIVE SCHOOLS

On September 20, 1987, Senator STANFORD and I introduced S. 1815, the Effective Schools Development in Education Act. A body of research had validated that some schools, including those in poor areas and with disadvantaged students, have been successful in improving student achievement. The "effective schools" research has discovered that certain characteristics—strong leadership, emphasis on the acquisition of basic skills, and a safe and orderly school environment, among others—are shared by these effective schools and can be replicated in other schools. The effective schools section of H.R. 5 attempts to build upon this research by targeting grant funds—under chapter 2 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act—to be used to plan, implement, support, and otherwise encourage effective schools programs within that State.

STRENGTHENING CHAPTER 2

On the same day, we also introduced S. 1699, the Elementary and Secondary Reform Amendments of 1987. Its basic purpose was to more effectively target limited Federal education funds on a fixed set of high priority Federal programs. I am pleased that S. 373, as it passed the Senate included that necessary tightening of the chapter 2 program by establishing a series of priority programs for spending chapter 2 funds. The conference report reflects those priorities.

PROGRAM IMPROVEMENT

One of the most difficult issues to resolve was the whole question of providing for appropriate accountability, among teachers and school administrators, for student progress in the chapter 1 program. While there was much rhetoric about "State takeovers" of local school district programs—this was blown way out of proportion—the conferees did reach agreement on a critical section coauthored by Senator QUAYLE and myself, which will ensure that student progress is effectively monitored and, when needed, additional resources are brought to bear to assure that poor children who benefit from the chapter 1 program succeed like all other schoolchildren.

We are requiring program improvement plans to be developed for schools experiencing difficulty in achieving stated program goals. Each local educational agency [LEA] must develop a plan if any of the following conditions occurs for one year: One, a school does not show substantial progress toward meeting the desired outcomes described in the LEA's application in terms of acquiring the basic and more advanced skills that all children are expected to master; or two, the school shows no improvement; or three, the school shows a decline in aggregate performance. The joint statement of managers makes clear the meaning of the second option "no improvement." I would like to be sure the record is clear about the "substantial progress" phrase in terms of meeting the desired outcomes. That term means enough annual progress in each of the 3 years of the program to achieve those outcomes by the end of the 3-year cycle contemplated under program improvement. Obviously, some situations may take longer and the statute recognizes that possibility. Thus, children would be closing the gap between their current skill levels and those expected for all children of their age or grade level at a pace of one-third each year.

Mr. President, I am especially indebted to the leadership of the Council of Chief State School Officers, the State Boards of Education, the National PTA, the National Urban League, the Children's Defense Fund, the National Urban Coalition, and especially the Harvard Center for Law and Education for their work on the school improvement section of this bill. We need more people who care about students and less about paperwork and their own prerogatives in the school policymaking process.

RACIALLY ISOLATED SCHOOLS

I was also concerned about the growing tendency for large numbers of minority, poor children to be concentrated in large, urban school districts with the least amount of resources to pay for the cost of their education. Many of these school districts receive insufficient or no chapter 1 funds to help them. Some qualify for the Magnet Schools Program, but many do not because they do not have a current court order, nor an administrative decree from the Education Department. Ironically, the District of Columbia—ordered to desegregate its schools in 1954—Bolling versus Sharpe—does not qualify for magnet schools funding. I strongly supported creation of a new part B in the Magnet Schools Program to serve racially isolated schools. Improving the academic program at all schools in a school district may be the only way to attract whites back to the public schools. It works in Chicago; it is working at Banneker School here in the District; but Benjamin Banneker in Washington, DC, and Whitney Young in Chicago should be the norm, not the exception. Every child ought to have the same chance to learn and their educational future ought not be determined simply by where they live. The conferees accepted a modified version of the part B, magnet schools concept, which I hope will begin to address the problem.

Mr. President, I want to thank Senators HATCH, KENNEDY, and WEICKER for their leadership on this issue.

Finally, Mr. President, I want to commend the staff members of all Senators on the Labor and Human Resources Committee. Many of them have worked for more than a year on this important bill. I especially want to commend David Evans, Ann Young, and Sarah Flanagan of Senator PELL's staff and Ellin Nolan and Becky Rogers of Senator STAFFORD's staff, as well as Bud Blakey, Judy White, and Pat Fahy of my own staff.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, America cannot afford to lose even one human mind to ignorance, poverty or neglect. It is vital, for the economic security of our Nation, to focus our legislative energies on services that will benefit the development of today's children. An educated, trained work force is the foundation upon which we must build, to assure future economic success and stability and international competitiveness. Today, we can bolster America's foundations by supporting the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary Education Improvement Amendments of 1988, H.R. 5.

H.R. 5 encompasses many vital education programs that will extend the historic commitment to eliminate poverty, promote educational equity and improve access for disadvantaged children. To help this Nation cope with future demographic and technological changes, several new programs for early intervention, basic skills and literacy, and math and science education are included in the package. I am proud to have had a hand in authoring the initiatives on dropout prevention, workplace literacy and model foreign language to help students prepare to work in our transitional economy.

Today, we are confronted with a national dropout rate of 30 percent, and up to 60 percent in some inner cities. One out of four children are living in poverty. And 35 percent of children entering school this year are forecasted to end up on welfare by the age of 18.

We cannot afford to let the children living in poverty, the children of illiterate parents or the children of immigrants who speak little English slip through the cracks of our education system. These children deserve an education that will prepare them for the demands of the workplace and offer many of them an avenue out of poverty. Programs that offer literacy skills, basic skills development, special language, math and science instruction and incentives for youth to stay in school, are the most important means of preventing the creation of a permanent underclass of Americans and building a strong, dynamic, literate, trained work force.

By the year 2000, we will need these youth to run our country. There will be fewer Americans entering the work force in the year 2000. Our Nation's economic strength and competitiveness will depend on the participation of groups that traditionally have the highest rates of unemployment and poverty, the greatest family obligations and the lowest levels of education and job experience. The economic challenges that America will face in the future will demand an unprecedented level of workplace skills and productivity from all Americans.

While this bill is a major step in the right direction, it is only one of many steps necessary to make investments in our future. With one out of four children living in poverty, we must examine our education and welfare systems, our Nation's job market and the availability and affordability of child care for unemployed and low income parents. Our ability to solve the Nation's education problems and develop a work force equipped to face the challenges of the future, depends on much more than the educational opportunities available to children.

Before concluding my remarks, I would like to thank Senators PELL and STAFFORD for their leadership on this bill. While my colleague from Rhode Island, CLAIBORNE PELL, will be around next year to lead the crusade for education policy, I must pay tribute to my Republican colleague from Vermont, ROBERT STAFFORD. Senator STAFFORD, over the last 20 years, has made invaluable contributions to this Nation through education policy. His commitment and leadership will be missed.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I rise in support of H.R. 5, the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988, as amended by the House. This version of H.R. 5 represents the agreements of the conference committee on the education portions of the bill and includes the legislative language passed by the Senate regarding the dial-a-porn issue, which would prohibit obscene or indecent communications by telephone.

I am in full support of this dial-a-porn prohibition, which was originally offered by Senator HELMS, and am very pleased that the House of Representatives voted 379 to 22 to add the Helms language to the conference committee agreements on the education bill.

Dial-a-porn phone messages are one of the most invidious inventions of our times and it is repugnant that children and teenagers have had access to them. I am hopeful that the Helms language is successful in eliminating these messages from our telephone system.

H.R. 5, as rewritten by the conference committee, is a good bill and deserves the full support of the Senate. Throughout the long negotiations on this bill, Senators PELL and STAFFORD worked closely with other members of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources and protected the Senate position with the House.

I am particularly pleased by the provisions in the bill to strengthen program improvement of the chapter 1 program. If students are not showing improvement in their academic skills, the local school will be helped by the school district and the State so that student achievement occurs. We must ensure that the money being spent on this important program is resulting in increased achievement for the disadvantaged students participating. Otherwise, chapter 1 fails its mission and fails the students it is designed to help.

H.R. 5 includes many program improvements for chapter 1 and chapter 2, as well as the Bilingual Education Program, the Magnet Schools Program, and the Adult Education Act. This bill continues the Federal commitment to providing education to disadvantaged children and those with special needs with increased authorization levels. This bill will help many thousands of students to improve their academic skills and become productive and contributing members of our society.

H.R. 5 is titled the "Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988," a tribute to two legislators who have spent most of their careers working to benefit the American educational system and our children. I am very pleased that these two individuals have been recognized, especially Senator STAFFORD, who will leave this body at the end of this session. My friend from Vermont has been a tireless supporter of education, and we will miss his guidance and dedication in this area.

I would also like to commend Senators PELL, KENNEDY, and HATCH for their hard work on this bill. They have all made this a better bill by being open to the concerns of other Senators and have worked in a bipartisan fashion, resulting in a consensus bill.

Again, Mr. President, I rise in support of H.R. 5 and urge its adoption by my colleagues.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, the conference report on H.R. 5, approved today by the Senate, is the culmination of an extraordinary, successful bipartisan effort. This historic 5 year authorization is a forward-looking bill which seeks to deal with the immediate problems of elementary and secondary education. It also provides special assistance to help us with the complex, long-term problems facing us today and into tomorrow.

Chapter 1, the backbone of the Federal effort to enhance the educational opportunities for the children of low-income families, is greatly improved in H.R. 5. The institutionalization of poverty we have witnessed during this administration has hit our young students particularly hard. There is increasing evidence that the poor and disadvantaged children of this Nation are tragically left behind by an education system which is failing us. We can neither afford nor tolerate this waste of human potential. This Nation needs the resources of all of our young people and disadvantaged students deserve the dignity and opportunity of an education which will lead to jobs and equity in our society. The flexibility and initiatives built into chapter 1 will provide much-needed assistance to our schools.

Chapter 2 has been similiarly strengthened in H.R. 5. The block grants for State and local education agencies are important to meeting special needs in areas from at-risk students to gifted and talented students, from teacher training to materials purchasing. The bill contains flexibility here while maintaining the formula split of 20 percent to the State agencies and 80 percent to the local agencies.

A number of other programs authorized here will help us deal with some of the most pressing problems in our schools today. The math and science teacher training will move us forward in providing the kind of faculty support necessary for strengthening national performance in math and science. The Star Schools Program, an initiative of the senior Senator from Massachusetts provides an opportunity for bringing the best of new technology to teachers and classrooms.

The reauthorization through 1993 of the Drug Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 is key to providing our communities with the resources for educating students and parents on the risks of drug and alcohol abuse. No single issue threatens the future of America's youth more than drugs. I am especially pleased that H.R. 5 requires the Secretaries of Education and Health and Human Services to develop and coordinate a national education program of drug education. Similarly the assistance to State and local organizations on drug education and the maintainance of five regional centers on the issue are important. The record shows that drug education works and while budgetary limits constrain what can be done here, these programs are important for many schools and communities.

Other provisions included in the bill have been amply discussed in passage of the Senate bill, Mr. President. Let me briefly call attention to the conference work in impact aid, bilingual education, Indian education, vocational education. Difficult issues have been addressed and resolved in a manner which will allow workable solutions for most problems.

Other important programs included in this comprehensive bill are noteworthy. Magnet schools, women's educational equity, immigrant education, the child development program and the disability demonstration project are all examples of efforts to respond to the unique needs of students. Each and every one of these programs has demonstrated success in meeting those needs and keeping students in school and learning.

In summary, Mr. President, I commend the conferees for a job well done. It is especially appropriate to thank Senators PELL and STAFFORD who have labored nearly 2 years to accomplish today's passage. Their leadership has been exemplarly and we are all in their debt.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to voice my strong support for the conference agreement on H.R. 5, the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988. I truly believe that this agreement reflects the best combination of Senate and House bills.

Never before in our history has education been more critical to our nation's economic well-being. In order to compete in today's highly technological world, it is essential that we have a well-educated and well-qualified populace. Widespread access to education is the Nation's best hope for economic growth and social progress. The Federal Government has no greater role than assuring access to a quality education.

In reauthorizing nearly all Federal elementary and secondary programs, H.R. 5 reaffirms the Government's commitment to providing a quality education for all Americans. This bill makes a number of changes that will improve the basic educational services that are provided to students, especially at-risk students, throughout the country.

The centerpiece of this legislation is the Chapter 1 Program for educationally disadvantaged children. Nearly 90 percent of the Nation's schools receive basic grants, which are distributed to school districts where at least 10 children come from families with incomes below the poverty level. Separate concentration grants are targeted to districts with a high number or percentage of low income students. The formula for distributing concentration grants is particularly beneficial to rural schools.

The conference agreement wisely retains the block grant approach to the Chapter 2 Program. This program gives States and local school districts the flexibility to design services to meet their specific needs. Local education agencies may use these funds to improve education in several broad areas including programs for at-risk students, gifted and talented, teacher training, and suicide prevention.

After a 6-year decline in impact aid funds, I am pleased to report that the trend is finally reversing. The bill creates a new formula for the Part A Program of grants and authorizes significant increases in funding each year. The Part B Program of payments for the construction of facilities in federally impacted districts is extended and the budget authority is increased yearly. The gains we have made in impact aid policy this year are significant, and it is my hope that they will be expanded upon in future years.

Mr. President, I am particularly pleased with the Indian education provisions included in the conference agreement. Last summer I held a hearing on education at Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. This hearing was held on S. 1645, a bill I cosponsored and the bill which ultimately became the Indian Title of H.R. 5.

By way of background, the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation has the unenviable distinction of being the poorest county in the State of South Dakota and the United States. Unemployment is at 85 percent, and all the social ills that go along with high unemployment are also prevalent—astronomically high rates of alcoholism, infant mortality, suicides, violent crimes, et cetera.

Further, 9 of the 25 poorest counties in the Nation are now in South Dakota, and 8 of these are on or near Indian reservations. All but 3 of the 25 counties saw per capita income fall between 1981 and 1986, an indication that the Nation's poorest are getting poorer.

But amidst all this poverty with all its unmet needs are some real signs of hope and progress—primarily in the area of education.

Because the Indian community has been making great strides in this area, I was particularly pleased to be associated with the Select Committee on Indian Affairs' efforts to develop the Indian title of H.R. 5 and to have able to conduct a hearing in my own State on its largest reservation.

Since the 1970's, South Dakota has seen five tribally controlled community colleges flourish—providing further education in a supportive environment close to the reservation. The South Dakota Sioux are acknowledged nationally for their leadership in this area. Cheyenne River, Standing Rock, Sisseton Wahpeton Community Colleges and, of course, Sinte Glaska and Oglala Lakota offer real hope to those Indian communities they serve.

One of the items contained in the Indian title of this bill, is a program creating a gifted and talented program for Indian children. The program would establish resource centers in two tribal colleges that would provide assistance to Indian schools in developing educational programs for gifted and talented children. One of these resource centers would be located at Sinte Gleska on Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota.

Clearly, quality education is one of the highest priorities of my Indian constituents, if not the highest—despite many unmet needs. The following are some of the provisions in the Indian title which will enable Native Americans to reach some of their goals in education.

First, the bill would permit the establishment of a tribal department of education to oversee schools run by the BIA and by tribes. This provision will enable the Oglala Sioux at Pine Ridge to actively plan and better coordinate all of its educational programs. It would further the concept of self-determination by insuring the maximum participation of the Oglala in determining their future educationally.

Second, the bill will prohibit the Interior Secretary from closing any BIA-funded schools without tribal or congressional approval and bar changes in BIA education regulations over the next 14 months.

Third, the bill will strengthen provisions in existing law that require BIA to consult with tribes before making any changes that would affect schools for Indian children. This was in response to an attempt by the BIA to transfer control of BIA-run schools to local educational agencies or other organizations.

Fourth, the bill would authorize $70 million for grants for projects to meet the supplementary educational and cultural needs of Indian school children. The bill also reauthorizes demonstration programs for such things as curriculum development and dropout prevention; fellowship grants for Indian students; and adult education programs.

Fifth, the bill would create a program for early childhood development, requiring BIA to coordinate existing educational and social programs for very young children. The bill authorizes $15 million a year for the program.

Sixth, the bill would provide authority for a White House Conference on Indian Education to occur between September 1989 and September 1991.

Seventh, the bill would require the Office of Indian Programs within the Department of Education to give priority to Indians when hiring.

If America is to regain lost ground in world markets and maintain economic security, we must continue the Federal commitment of dollars to education. A sound education is perhaps the most fundamental tool America can offer its citizens. The enactment of this conference agreement will go a long way toward making this country stronger and better because it will provide the children of our Nation with the opportunity to receive the quality education to which they are entitled.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to H.R. 5, the elementary and secondary bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED—H.R. 4401

Mr. PELL. I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 615 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL. The bill deals with dial-a-porn, which is contained in H.R. 5 just acted on.

I thank the Chair.

WARTIME RELOCATION OF CIVILIANS

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS). The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I have been listening with great interest to my friend and colleague from Virginia, and I thank him for his well-said remarks. They were particularly on point.

I would just like to urge my colleagues to move forward on the bill that I am a cosponsor of that has been spearheaded by my friend and colleague, Senator MATSUNAGA, from Hawaii.

Since I have had a little personal experience in this particular area, that I will recite briefly, and while I do not think that we Americans should take pride in condemning ourselves, sometimes confessing a sin and being sorry for what you once did is good for the soul, and this might be a time that this is also good for the Nation.

As a young man growing up in South Dakota, when the rattle of World War II was on its path, and followed by the sneak attack by the Japanese Government on our important naval and military facilities in Hawaii, I remember well when the news came out that the Japanese were being rounded up, especially on the Pacific Coast, in the national security interests of the United States, and I remember well at that time that my father and my grandfather that I was very close to sitting there and discussing with me, a young lad that they expected would be involved in the military conflict in the years to come. They were rationalizing and discussing whether or not it was proper for the United States to round up Japanese who lived especially on the West Coast and intern them—I believe that was the term that was used at that particular time—and I thought my grandfather and my father had lost all reason.

We obviously were at war with the Japanese and to my young mind it only made sense that since we were at war with the Japanese we were at war with the Japanese on the Japanese mainland and also with the Japanese who lived in America, because you see in Lake Andes, SD, we did not have any Japanese. In my young mind I thought that was the proper thing to do.

Oh, I rationalized that some of them, a few of them probably were good Americans, but from my logic it only made sense that most of them were agents of the Japanese Government, and while I thought that there may be a few Japanese-Americans who were good, not very many of them could have been good and if we abused a few that was a part of the situation that we found ourselves in at that time and, of course, everybody at that time detested the Government of Japan.

My father and my grandfather, who had a lot more wisdom than I did, said this reminded them of World War I. While we did not have any Japanese in Lake Andes, SD, my hometown, we had an awful lot of Germans because the German stock were the ones that came over and homesteaded in my particular home area and were some of the outstanding citizens, of course, in South Dakota at that time and have been ever since.

But they told me about World War I and how anyone with a German name back in World War I regardless of whether they were good Americans or not were suspect and if anyone ever spoke German during that time they were convinced that they were certainly, if not an agent of the German Government, they had to be sympathetic to them or they would not speak German.

How idiotic can we be? How idiotic it was looking back on it that we did what we did as a Nation to Japanese-Americans who were just as good Americans as anyone else, and we have ample testimony of that right here in the U.S. Senate in both Senator MATSUNAGA and his colleague, Senator INOUYE, both wounded, decorated, veterans on the side of the United States, like so many Japanese-Americans were in World War II.

I only say this, Mr. President, because shame on us for assuming just because we did not have German names in 1917, shame on us as Americans just because we did not have Japanese names in 1941 that we took it upon ourselves to decide what was right and what was wrong regardless of the rights of the individual.

I am proud of the fact that this Senator from Nebraska is supporting the measure before us. Oh, it is going to cost some money. That is right. But certainly it is not going to cost very much money compared to what we did and the shame of what we did to the Japanese-Americans at the beginning of World War II.

I remember another personal factor that I do not think my friend and colleague, Senator MATSUNAGA, knows about. But a few months after that talk I had with my father and grandfather that I related to you, that vibrant American boy named JIM EXON, with the right color eyes and the right color skin, found himself in the service of the United States and before I served overseas 2 years fighting the Japanese, I ended up in the Signal Corps camp in California. It was Camp Pinedale, and when we got there it was the sorriest looking camp I had ever seen or ever imagined. It was nothing more than a group of tar-paper covered shacks. Some improvements were made while I took my basic training at that particular Signal Corps camp.

But, nevertheless, one of the reasons we did not like it was the fact that this was a Japanese internment camp where a sizable number of the Japanese who were originally gathered up were dumped into this dump of an internment camp.

As I understand it, the reason that they made way and put the Signal Corps people in there was the fact that they were not sure that it was safe to have those Japanese-Americans even in California; they wanted to move them farther inland where they would not be as much of a menace to the war efforts of the United States of America.

I only cite that personal history of mine and I hope you will forgive me, Mr. President, for getting personal in these things. I am not sure that that helps. I only cite it for the fact that I have personal insight into what we did to great Japanese-Americans at that time and anyone who would quibble about the amount of money that we are giving to try in a small way make up for that great injustice and take that position in my view does not understand, does not appreciate, and has not learned the histories of doing the wrong thing, of making judgment about others that all of us have done from time to time throughout our history going way, way back.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope that we will not have any other votes. I hope that no further killer amendments, like the one that was just defeated substantially, will be offered.

I salute the leadership of Senator MATSUNAGA in bringing this to the attention of America. As Americans, we should be saluting the initiative of the Senator from Hawaii and maybe at least we can cleanse our souls for the sin that the Government of the United States committed against American citizens of Japanese origin that were just as good, if not better, Americans, as many of them proved in World War II.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield before he yields the floor?

Mr. EXON. I would be happy to yield.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Nebraska for his early cosponsorship of the measure and for the great support that he has given the measure. The statement which he just made in which he cited his own experience with Japanese-Americans and his recitation of what happened in World War II I think sheds considerable light upon what can happen to any group of Americans. This is what S. 1009 is intended to prevent. In World War II, while we were engaged in war against Germany and Italy, neither Italian-Americans nor German-Americans were evacuated from the west coast, only the Japanese-Americans were evacuated and interned.

So I thank the Senator from Nebraska for bringing that point to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. EXON. I thank my friend from Hawaii. I do this, as he knows, with all sincerity and freedom of heart. I guess that when I vote for this bill, I feel that in some way I will have made amends for the feeling that I admitted that I had at one time. We all learn and become wiser as we go along.

I would simply say to the Senator from Hawaii that the reason that we did not intern German-Americans in World War II, you see we learned our lesson with them in World War I. But, as we do so often, in times of hysteria, in terms of fear—and I do remember also that there was a greater fear in America at the time that there was an imminent Japanese invasion that was likely to follow within 2 weeks of the attack on Pearl Harbor.

So I guess that we can forgive America for over reacting. But with what we did to German-Americans, which was a disgrace, in World War I and what we did to Japanese-Americans, which was a compounding of the disgrace, in World War II, the bill offered by the Senator from Hawaii may set the record straight that if we have made mistakes in the past we learned from them and will not let it happen in the future.

I thank the Senator from Hawaii for his kind remarks.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I am encouraged that this legislation has been presented for consideration before the full Senate. It is an important issue; one that would address our tragic mistakes of the past. With S. 1009, we are addressing the Japanese relocation efforts during World War II and acknowledging the gross aberration of Japanese-Americans' civil rights. And we should offer them redress.

As a Senator from the State of Washington, I have a special interest in this legislation. The first group of Japanese citizens to be removed from their homes under President Roosevelt's Executive order were from Bainbridge Island, WA. They were the first of nearly 13,000 Japanese-Americans from the State of Washington to be funneled into assembly centers and eventually into relocation facilities.

Victims of Executive Order 9066 were given very short notice that they would be sent to relocation facilities. Most were granted just a few days to abandon their homes and belongings. As a result they were forced to sell or lease their property and businesses at prices reflecting only a fraction of their worth. Substantial economic losses were incurred. Once they arrived at the relocation centers they found a quality of life which was atrocious. They were overcrowded and families suffered from an acute lack of privacy with no borders or walls to separate them from others.

Opponents of this legislation choose to ignore raw, racial prejudice woven in what was supposed to be legitimate national security justification for internment. The evacuees, however, were guilty of no crime other than the apparent crime of being of Japanese ancestry. Japanese-Americans left their homes in an atmosphere of racial prejudice and returned to the same.

What is perhaps most alarming about the Japanese internment is that it took place in the United States of America. This is the same country which has prided itself on freedom, justice, and the preservation and protection of individual rights.

Thirty-four years after the last citizens were released from captivity, Congress established the Commission on the Wartime Relocation and Internment of Japanese-American Citizens to assess the decision to intern and relocate Japanese-Americans. Two years after its inception, the Commission issued certain factual findings and subsequent recommendations. I have cosponsored legislation to implement these recommendations throughout my tenure in the U.S. Senate.

The $20,000 compensation that would be allotted to each victim, and the educational fund established by this legislation are a modest attempt to redress wrongs against loyal Americans. Although we cannot restore completely what already has been lost, the legislation would serve as a symbol to all that the United States can come to terms with its own tragic mistake.

Our legal tradition provides us with a system of damage compensation to promote accountability in government's actions. For example, false imprisonments from the May Day demonstrations in 1972 resulted in a Federal court decision to award money damages to the demonstrators for the hours they spent in detention. Additionally, special compensation was rightfully granted to the 52 Iran hostages under the Hostage Relief Act and Anti-Terrorism Act. These examples offer precedential evidence that victims justifiably have received individual compensation for a loss of bodily freedom. Furthermore, Federal law affords both equitable relief and money damages under section 1983, against any State or Federal official who violates a person's constitutional rights.

Today, we have the opportunity to use our hindsight. And with the 20-20 vision it provides, we not only can recognize this flagrant injustice from history, but we can learn from it. By offering redress to the Japanese-Americans we will invest in a deterrent from future atrocities.

Mr. President, similar legislation in 98th and 99th Congresses never was granted a complete hearing. Congress must no longer delay consideration of this issue. It is time that we accept the Commission's recommendations and endorse its remedy for reparation. I urge my colleagues to cast a vote in favor of its passage.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I believe Senator HELMS is prepared to offer an amendment. Until such time as he arrives on the floor, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1968

(Purpose: to provide that no funds may be appropriated in any year in which there will be a budget deficit)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. Mr. President, in this case I ask the clerk to read the entire amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] proposes an amendment numbered 1968.

At the end of the bill, add the following:

TITLE IV—REQUIREMENT FOR A BALANCED BUDGET

SEC. 401. (a) PROHIBITION ON APPROPRIATIONS.—No funds may be appropriated under this Act for any fiscal year if

(1) it is determined, under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, that there will be a deficit in such fiscal year; or

(2) if the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget, adopted pursuant to Section 301 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, sets for a deficit for such fiscal year.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair and I thank the distinguished clerk.

I found the vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HECHT], to be quite interesting and enlightening because it disclosed that money is an important aspect to this bill. That prompts me to suggest that it is time for the Senate to make a realistic judgment about whether the taxpayers of this country can afford to have Congress appropriate $1.3 billion for this purpose.

Bear in mind, Mr. President, that a very small percentage, relatively, of the American people alive today were even born when Pearl Harbor was virtually destroyed and our fleet was lying on the bottom. I do not know what that percentage is, but I think the percentage is zero of American people alive today who had anything whatsoever to do with the decisions on the relocation of Japanese-Americans.

So, what we are talking about is adding to the burden of the working taxpayers today, another $1.3 billion for something they had nothing to do with. Since so many of them were not even born, I wonder about the fairness of doing that.

I have three children. As of yesterday, I have six grandchildren. Amelia Jane Helms was born in Winston-Salem, NC, yesterday afternoon. I had to get that in, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFEICER. The Chair understands the pride of the Senator from North Carolina, and it is appreciated by all Members.

Mr. HELMS. Bragging ain't bragging if you can prove it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is right.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

But I think it is about time that we think about fairness for them, too. Nobody is, in retrospect, proud of the relocation of the Japanese-Americans during World War II, but as I said earlier, we lived in a time of terror in this country immediately after the attack on Pearl Harbor. Nobody knew what was coming next, and even though I do not now belong to the party of Franklin Roosevelt, I reject the implicit condemnation of the judgments that he made based on intelligence reports made to him by this Government.

Mistakes are made constantly by any government in times of stress, and certainly that was a stressful, emotional time. Nobody knew what to expect.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER], recalled that this Capital City was in darkness. Nobody knew whether there was going to be an attack on Washington, DC, in addition to that, our forces lacked weaponry. I recall that soldiers were stationed on the roof of the House Office Building, and they did not even have rifles. They had wooden imitations of guns.

I went to the recruiting station in Raleigh, NC, on the afternoon of December 7, 1941, and volunteered but was turned down because of ear difficulty. It was 3 months later before I was sworn in, I had to get a waiver from the Navy.

It was a stressful time, and nobody knew what was going to happen next.

I have not heard mentioned on this floor during this debate anything about what the U.S. Government has done in the interim since World War II in a good faith attempt to compensate the victims of relocation for their losses.

I say again that the decisions on which this legislation is based were taken against a backdrop of fear for the survival of America. We had just been attacked by a totalitarian regime which had enjoyed a virtually unbroken string of military successes, both before and immediately after the Government of Japan attacked the United States of America.

I was a much younger man on that day when Franklin D. Roosevelt went to the House of Representatives and talked about a day of infamy.

But I think it is self-evident that all of us, prior to the offering of this legislation, had put that behind us.

I have great affection for a number of Japanese leaders. I consult with them frequently. Just yesterday I was in a very pleasant conversation with the Japanese Ambassador to the United States I might add. He is a delightful man.

I have dealt with Mr. Nakasone on numerous occasions and found him to be a reliable friend. So that is behind us.

I have heard from a lot of survivors of American fighting men who were killed in Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, and they say: "How about us?"

I take nothing away; as a matter of fact, I praise men like Senator MATSUNAGA and DANNY INOUYE who fought for this country, and they know of my admiration and respect for them.

But, on the other hand, I think it is only fair to look back to that time, and recall the fact that our intelligence community told the then President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, that there was great risk. Now we can see that it was a mistake.

I have no vision problem with respect to that. We will have 20-20 vision by hindsight, and I am perfectly willing for this Senate and this Congress to declare that this kind of thing must never happen again.

But the Senate has just voted to give the priority emphasis to money, $1.3 billion. So I think we ought to look at our priorities. That is the purpose of this amendment.

We have had another Japanese-American citizen in this Senate in the recent past, himself a delightful man, Sam Hayakawa from California, who served one term. On December 7, 1982, Senator Hayakawa, a splendid Japanese-American, had this to say:

> It is difficult for people who did not live through that dreadful time to reconstruct the terror and the anxiety felt by people along the entire west coast. Disaster followed upon disaster after the attack on Pearl Harbor. * * * Japanese forces landed on the Malay Peninsula and began their drive toward Singapore. Guam fell on December 10, Wake on December 23. On December 8 Japanese planes destroyed half the aircraft on the airfields near Manila. As enemy troops closed in, General MacArthur withdrew his forces from the Philippines and retired to Australia. On Christmas Day the British surrendered Hong Kong.
> The Western World was scared stiff. The west coast of the United States, rich with naval bases, shipyards, oil fields, and aircraft factories, seemed especially vulnerable to attack.
> There was talk of evacuating not just the Japanese from the west coast but everybody. Who knew what was going to happen next?

And I recall those days, Mr. President.

> How frightening were the nightly blackouts during that bleak winter of defeat. Would Japanese carriers come to bomb the cities—San Diego, San Francisco, Los Angeles? Would submarines sneak through the Golden Gate to shell San Francisco? Would they actually mount an invasion? Who could tell?
> Of course the relocation was unjust.

I might say, Mr. President, parenthetically, there is no disagreement by 20-20 hindsight on that point. I will sign an affidavit to it.

> But under the stress of wartime anxieties and hysteria and in the light of the long history of antioriental agitation in California and the West, I find it difficult to imagine what else could have occurred that would not have been many times worse. If things had continued to go badly for American forces in the Pacific—and they did—what would Americans on the west coast have done to their Japanese and Japanese-American neighbors as they learned of more American ships sunk, more American planes shot down, more American servicemen killed, including your husbands, your boyfriend, your brothers? What would they have done? Would they have beaten their Japanese neighbors in the streets? Would they have ostracized and persecuted Japanese-American children? Would mobs have descended on Little Tokyo in Los Angeles and Japan town in San Francisco to burn down shops and homes?
> Again the popular hue and cry was backed up by reputable intellectuals. Walter Lippmann, the dean of American social commentators then and for decades thereafter, joined in the demand for mass evacuation. The idea was also supported at the time by such liberal intellectual journals as the Nation, the New Republic, and the extra-liberal but short-lived New York newspaper, PM.

Now, then, Mr. President, the U.S. Government, contrary to suggestions otherwise, has not ignored the suffering that occurred as a result of the relocation and internment during the war. The Government has officially recognized that much unjustified personal hardship was, in fact, caused. Previous Congresses, Presidents and Attorneys General have taken steps to acknowledge and compensate Japanese-Americans for the injuries they suffered.

For example, in 1948, Congress enacted the American Japanese Claims Act, which authorized compensation for "any claim" for damages to or loss of real or personal property "as a reasonable consequence of the evacuation or exclusion of" persons of Japanese ancestry as a result of governmental action during World War II.

I might add that this act of 1948 was subsequently amended to liberalize its compensation provisions.

Under the amended act, the Justice Department received claims seeking approximately $147 million. Ultimately, 26,568 settlements were achieved, many of which involved claims presented by family groups rather than individual claimants. So I think it is safe to conclude that of the 120,000 evacuees, most of them submitted claims under the American Japanese Claims Act and received compensation from the American taxpayers. A total of more than $37 million was paid in compensation pursuant to this act alone.

True enough, the American Japanese Claims Act did not include every item of damage that was or could have been suggested. It did, however, address the hardships visited upon persons of Japanese ancestry in a comprehensive, considered manner taking into account individual needs and losses, and this effort to correct injustice to individuals was in keeping with our Nation's best tradition of individual rather than collective response, and it was far more contemporaneous with the injuries to the claimants than would be any payments at this late date. But let me move along.

Mr. President, in 1956, Congress considered legislation that challenged the adequacy of the claims settlements provided pursuant to the 1948 act. That bill would have liberalized the relief provision of the act by granting expanded compensation for certain losses, and Congress specifically rejected the proposal because, in the words of Congress, "It would substantially reopen the entire project."

If you want a reference on that, it is House Report No. 1809, 84th Congress, 2d session, 9 (1956).

In 1972, Congress amended the Social Security Act so that Japanese-Americans over the age of 18 would be deemed to have earned and contributed to the Social Security System during their detention. The Federal civil service retirement provisions were amended in 1978 to allow Japanese-Americans credit for the time spent in detention after the age of 18.

Mr. President, one of the reasons I oppose this effort to pay additional reparations to individuals is because Congress has already enacted a comprehensive statutory scheme providing a reasonable, balanced contemporaneous remedy to affected individuals. By enacting the 1948 American Japanese Claims Act, Congress recognized long ago that many loyal Americans of Japanese descent were injured by the wartime relocation and internment program. Although the Commission's report challenges the amount of compensation chosen by Congress as inadequate, Congress has spoken after considerable debate, and there is no good reason to question that settlement some three and one-half decades later.

Mr. President, nothing has occurred since that time to warrant a supplemental payment to the internees. The results of the settlement process under the act, long since completed, deserve to be accepted as a fair resolution of the claims involved. If it was inadequate, those inadequacies can and should be determined and resolved by the courts—not in a political carnival in an election year by the Congress.

Oh, it is so easy, Mr. President, to spend somebody else's money. That is the problem with the Nation's finances right now. Year after year, decade after decade, Congress has come in here willy-nilly, Senate and House, and said, "Wouldn't it be nice, wouldn't it be politically appealing if we appropriated a few billion dollars for that." It did not matter where the money came from, just appropriate it, spend somebody else's money. And I daresay that the young working men and women of this country will probably resent being used as pawns in this matter. They had nothing to do with any judgment made in the early 1940's. As a matter of fact, as I said earlier, I do not believe anybody is alive today who participated in the decision. Certainly, Franklin Roosevelt is not alive. He is not here to defend himself. And while it may be a bit odd for a Senator on this side of the aisle to defend Franklin Roosevelt, I defend him because he acted on the best information available to him in a time of stress and terror and turmoil in the United States of America.

But here we are going to dump this load on top of other loads we have dumped on the young working men and women of this country. It is another $1.3 billion to be added to the debt—so here we go again.

The pending amendment at the desk, Mr. President, is so clear and so simple that any schoolboy could understand it. It simply states that "no appropriations will be in order under this bill if the budget projection by the Congressional Budget Office, pursuant to the Budget Act projects a deficit for the following year or if the budget resolution for the next fiscal year sets forth a deficit."

In other words, I am saying we cannot afford to spend $1.3 billion for this purpose now. Day after day, week after week, and month after month we come to this Chamber and say: "Oh, I'm for fiscal responsibility." Those words roll off the lips of Senators, and then they turn right around and add $1.3 billion here and $5 billion here and $6 billion there.

I went out there and looked at the trees on the Capitol lawn one day, Mr. President. I walked all around when the Senate was in recess and, you know, I did not find a single tree with money on it, not one. The money we spend comes from the hide of the working taxpayers of America.

Now, we can be regretful. We can be apologetic. I am willing to be both. Any American in his right mind would testify under oath that we should never engage in this kind of internment and relocation again, but in the same breath I have to say that I recall those days of terror and horror and frightful expectation.

I do not think the present occupant of the chair was in the Chamber when I earlier mentioned that only one time in history has the Rose Bowl football game been played in any place other than Pasadena, CA. It was played in Durham, NC, in January 1942 simply because intelligence furnished Franklin Delano Roosevelt warned that there was a distinct possibility that Japanese planes would bomb that stadium if it were filled with people for the Rose Bowl game in January 1942. So it was moved all the way across the country to Durham, NC, 21 miles from my home, the only time the game has been moved.

The anomaly of all of this emphasis on money, Mr. President, is that the Senate has just passed a budget resolution setting forth a deficit of approximately $140 billion. Already, at best, we are going to go further in the red next fiscal year by $140 billion. Here we come with another $1.3 billion. I suppose there will be some who will say it is just $1.3 billion. But where I come from, a billion bucks is something you cannot even see in your mind's eye—$1.3 billion.

We have heard a lot of rhetoric about budget problems and a willingness to get rough and make tough decisions. I do not think that the vote on the amendment offered by Senator HECHT of Nevada justifies all of that bravado, macho, rhetoric by Senators. The plain truth is that we do not intend to balance the budget. If we did, if we had been, we would have cut spending around this place a long time ago. Those of us who voted against this add-on or this excess are regarded as reactionary. The most reactionary thing I can think of is to continue to pile billions upon billions of dollars of debt upon the working people of this country.

I have not taken a pool on this question. But I dare say that if the American people understand what is involved in this bill and could be polled on it, I think we would get a very clear message that they would oppose it.

Mr. President, I am going to have further remarks about this bill. I will have further amendments in time. But I think I have said enough for the time being.

Before I yield the floor, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

Mr. MATSUNAGA addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina. The bill as reported by the committee already has a provision, section 207, entitled "Compliance with Budget Act," which provides as follows:

> No authority under this title to enter into contracts or to make payments shall be effective except to the extent or in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriations Acts.

The bill before us merely authorizes appropriations.

So if the budgetary situation is such that the Appropriations Committee determines that there can be no appropriations made because of the huge budgetary deficit, then the Appropriations Committee will not make the appropriations. There already is that safeguard. And the safeguard provision was put in upon the suggestion of the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, Mr. Chiles.

So, Mr. Chairman, there is no need whatsoever for the amendment being offered by the Senator from North Carolina, and I urge its defeat.

Mr. President, I move to table that amendment.

Mr. HELMS. Would the Senator withhold just 1 second?

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator yielding for a question?

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina for a question.

Mr. HELMS. It is more than a question. But let me state it. The Senator referred to this in effect as an authorization bill, which of course, it is. That is the process around this place. You first have to authorize funds, and then the issue goes to the Appropriations Committee; but the Appropriations Committee, under our rule, is not supposed to make an appropriation until there is an authorization bill. So what the Senator is saying, I assume, is that we are following the usual procedure of an authorization bill for $1.3 billion. And then it would go to the Appropriations Committee, assuming that this bill is passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii has the floor.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I move to table the amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs upon the motion of the Senator from Hawaii to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Hawaii to table the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for 10 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be a 15-minute rollcall and that the call for the regular order occur at the expiration of the 15 minutes automatically.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Gore] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Kennedy] are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Biden] is absent because of illness

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Warner] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Shelby). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 1968 was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, does the Senator from North Carolina wish to offer further amendments?

Mr. HELMS. I think I have to have the floor in my own right to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, it has been a very interesting debate for me. I have been paying attention to it on the monitor. It has made me recall some most interesting and memorable parts of my own life because I was a young boy in Cody, Wyoming, in 1941 when the war started. I was 10 then.

Two years later, at the age of 12, somewhere between the years of 12 and 13, the third largest community in Wyoming was constructed between the communities of Powell and Cody, Wyoming, a city of 15,000 people which really literally went up overnight. And the name of it, of course, was Heart Mountain War Relocation Center, known to the people of the area simply as the "Jap Camp," a term which may be hard for us to believe now but that is what it was referred to then; swiftly built by those who had not been drafted into the war, or older men in their 40's who were not able to be taken into the war effort.

And so came into being Heart Mountain, Wyoming, War Relocation Center. There was barbed wire around it. There were guard towers at the edges of it. It was a very imposing area.

I guess the thing that you remember as a kid growing up, you suddenly were aware that here was this city of 15,000 people and we wondered what would happen if they all were to receive arms or weapons. Would they then come into the towns of Cody and Powell and capture the community? Silly things to think about, unless you are 12 or 13 and charting the course of the war in your bedroom, as to where the Allies were and Hitler and Tojo and Mussolini. Those were things that were very real to those of us of this vintage.

I remember one night very distinctly when the scoutmaster—I was a Boy Scout, a rather nominal one, but I enjoyed the activities of the group. And he said, "We are going to go out to the War Relocation Center and have a scout meeting." I said, "Well, I mean, are there any of them out there?", No. 1. He said, "Yes, yes, these are American citizens, you see." And that put a new twist on it because we thought of them as something else—as aliens; we thought of them as spies; we thought of them as people who were behind wire because they were trying to do in our country.

So I shall not forget going to the Boy Scout meeting and meeting Boy Scouts from California, most of them, I recall, same merit badges, same scout sashes, same clothing.

And why not? Some of them were second- or third-generation American citizens? We talked about all the things 13-year-old boys talk about in a complete spectrum of activity from merit badges to different kinds of books, what literature that you read at that tender age. We smoked a little cornsilk and did some other things that boys still do. Maybe—but they do not smoke that anymore. [Laughter.]

So it was there, at that particular scout gathering I met a young scout named NORM MINETA, who is now the Congressman from the area of San Jose, I believe it is his district, in California. I remember a very animated discussion with him, seeing how lively, bright and curious about things he was. He still is, here, as he performs his remarkable service as a very respected legislator. When he got elected mayor of San Jose, I wrote him a letter and said: Do you remember that fat kid from Cody who visited with you when we were at Heart Mountain? Then, of course, since both of us are here in Congress, we have renewed and refreshed that friendship many times.

Heart Mountain rises up strong and majestic from the floor of the lush, irrigated farm valleys in the Big Horn Basin, between Cody and Powell. Its rugged vertical thrust makes it a remarkable subject for many an artist's canvas. When I was a kid growing up in Cody, my friends and I envisioned it as our very own Mount Everest, challenging its eastern peak, and some of us prevailing only after a solid day's efforts. It was then—and still may be—true ritual to carve your initials in the rocks at the very top in order to "serve notice" that certain intrepid youth had conquered the lofty peak!

Today, on a return trip, it is impossible to distinguish one's own initials from the many others that also had "laid claim" to the land. However, there are some other very distinct markings that grace the same area and present themselves ever so clearly. They are Japanese letters and writings engraved in the rocks by the Japanese-American citizens who were interned in the Heart Mount relocation camp during World War II. It is a moving—and sobering—site to find high upon a Wyoming mountainside.

So, I also remember those other nights we would go into the compound—which it was in every sense, with searchlights and with wire—visiting with some of the older people. There were very few young men there from the ages of 17 through 28, because many of them were in the armed services of the United States. But I do remember visiting with the older people and there were many of them there.

The younger and the older were there. Those were the principal inhabitants. I remember a woman, a very old woman to me at that age, said "Do you have grandparents?"

I said, "Yes, I do."

She said, "Where do they live?"

I said, "In Cody, down the road there."

She said, "Well, what kind of a house do they have?"

I thought, well, that is interesting to ask. I described it.

"What do they do?"

And then I remember she showed me pictures of her family.

She said, "This is my son. He is in Italy now fighting for this country, the United States of America."

Then we would go downtown in Cody, WY, and there would be a sign on the restaurant that said, "No Japs allowed here." And then you would go down to another place of business, it might be a sign that said, "My son was killed at Iwo Jima. How do you think I feel?"

And the trustee's would come into town. They were remarkable people. Usually the best and the brightest. Maybe those who had been involved in agriculture and whose lands had been taken from them—confiscated.

So I really had a lot of trouble sorting that all out at the age of 13. I maybe have some of the same kind of trouble sorting it all out at the age of 56. But let me just say that I preserve it as a very formative part of my life. Yet I also observed that there were several within that compound who were very questionable as to their loyalties to the United States. Just like in any population of human beings. Of course, they had been pretty well interrogated before they came to Heart Mountain, or Colorado, or the main camps where they went. But in my mind you had to see it, you had to have it etched on the back of the rim of your eye, to understand that these people were put in an extraordinary situation where they lost their constitutional rights in the United States of America. They were not, as I say, aliens. They were U.S. citizens.

You have to also realize that it was a self-contained unit even with a mortuary in it. Of course many of the old people died in a rather harsh Wyoming winter, in what were then what we would call tarpaper shacks on the sagebrush plain.

The war ended. Many of them went back to their communities. Their land had been confiscated or sold. But then the land was opened to the veterans, the returning veterans of the armed services. And, ironically, and extraordinarily enough, some of the veterans that came and filed on the land were Japanese-Americans. They had been told that it was a pretty productive, though semiarid area, so here we saw this remaining, fascinating cycle closed with Japanese-American veterans filing on the lands of the war relocation center as they turned it over to the returning veterans of the United States. Some are still there. They are businessmen and women of Park County, WY. They raised sugar beets or bought lumber companies and did all the things American citizens do.

So I just had a desire to share that, as we have watched this debate. I am a cosponsor of the legislation. But yet there is a very troubling part of it to me and that has been reflected in two votes on this point.

There is no question about it being that gravest of injustices. And it may be hardly a repayable one. How do you ever really repay these people for the wages, the property, the opportunity, the education, the part of their lives lost during this period? And this taxpayer expenditure is a troubling part of the bill for me.

I have trouble with the money. An apology may be long overdue and may be so appropriate. But, coupled with money, it takes away some of the sincerity of the apology, somehow. If you did that with a friend, a lovely friend, and you said: I am sorry for what I did. I know that was very harmful to you and hurtful. But I am sorry and I apologize and I want to give you some money.

I think that that somehow is unbecoming. It may not be to some. It is a troubling aspect of it to me.

Our country has aggrieved many in its time. Sometimes intentionally and sometimes unintentionally. The Native Americans of my State suffered greatly, too. Should they be compensated with money? I have heard that in this debate. It is a troubling concept. Where does that end? How much will that cost? And yet the great majority of these people were and are loyal citizens of our land.

So, as I say I wish I could put all that into better blend of mind and heart. I do not think I can except to say that it remains puzzling.

What remains a bit more puzzling to me is the fact that we bring up an ancient grievance, and it is ancient in terms of the way we live in this place when the bottom line is what happens 3 months from now in corporate boardrooms or in this place, and say that here is it presented to us again through different sets of eyes. Then remember that at the time it happened that at least two of the greatest civil libertarians of our times, Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Earl Warren, thought it was the thing to do, as did the U.S. Supreme Court.

It is very interesting because it was a different time. It was a time when we were totally unprepared for what happened at Pearl Harbor. That was evident in the act and the essence of the attack. We were totally unprepared for what was occurring in California with regard to the blinking of lights in the interior, on the shore, communicating with vessels in the ocean off of California and people then who were apprehended as aliens who had explosives, devices, and weapons, some citizens, some aliens, some people waiting for the call to do what it was their country had decided to do, which was to invade and conquer the United States of America. That was a different time.

It is difficult to look on that now and understand that the people of the United States were at war with this nation. But the other part of it is too, that we did not do that to the German-American population, although certainly those who were of German descent in the United States were sometimes suspiciously eyed.

In that same area of my growing up was a little location, a rural area called Germania Bench, which then during the war was changed to Emblem Bench. They felt it very important to correct that. But we did not intern German-American citizens; we interned Japanese-American citizens. We did not intern Italian-American citizens, only Japanese-American citizens.

In any event, when it was done, it seemed like the very right thing to do, and I know that must stun and appall people in this country today, but at that time in most every structure of our citizenry, or Government and our bureaucracy, it seemed the very right thing to do.

So I guess I still have the same feelings of conflict. The conflict of the acutal money appropriation is overcome in the final analysis by the humanity of what happened.

I will be supporting the final product, but somehow I think there is something that does not ring right when you say to all of those that they be financially compensated regardless of their treatment, and some were treated much better than others, I might add. Some became remarkable teachers; some were great journalists; some went on to Government service, some did not. They were just like the regular population of human beings anywhere gathered. But somehow it seems to me we say to each of you who were there that you will receive $20,000 and then to each of the Aleut population of Alaska who were involved, you will receive $12,000. I do not know. That leaves a strange feeling in my craw. I share that knowing full well that in this issue, there will be those who will indeed criticize whatever position one would take.

It is an emotional and extraordinarily charged issue which has been conducted beautifully by our friend from Hawaii, my friend, Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA. Without the respect and affection we hold for him, this debate would have ranged into other fields, and he kept it from that. I give him my congratulations and my admiration.

So we will conclude this, and I think probably we will revisit this issue again, not with this situation but in other populations of our country, and we best know indeed, that will likely take place.

There is not one of us here today with what we have been through with our civil rights activities in 1964 and Selma that probably thinks: "How could this have ever occurred?" And yet at the time it occurred, it seemed at that time of our lives to be the most important step that could be taken.

That decision was made by people with much greater wisdom than I had at the age of 13 in Cody, WY.

Hopefully, we will conclude this debate shortly and move on to other issues of the day because this is an old and sad and very painful thing that we have reopened here in this debate. The sooner we close that wound and suture it with love and understanding and affection, we will be better off. And suturing it with money does not seem like the best way to conclude the issue.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, it really gives me no pleasure to appear in opposition to a bill of a respected friend. We have worked together on a number of things in the Finance Committee, and on energy matters. It just happens that on an issue of this dimension we are on opposite sides of a philosophical spectrum.

There is no doubt in my mind that this bill, which bears the cosponsorship of 75 Senators, will pass and that Senators supporting this measure will plead the case for a compassionate apology which will, at long last, right the wrong committed against internees some 45 years ago.

They will undoubtedly decry what they will call the unjustifiable actions of wartime leaders that today seems totally inconsistent with our form of Government. But, Mr. President, what seems incomprehensible today was the frightening reality of national security at the height of World War II.

Anyone who questions this is welcome to read any of several letters I have received from constituents detailing incidents such as a serviceman who, in the course of watching a Japanese prisoner of war in the Philippines during World War II, discovered that the man spoke English and had graduated from UCLA. And the prisoner, an officer in the Japanese Army, volunteered that of course there had been some Japanese-Americans who had been sending intelligence to Japan by radio, and that when in college he had made a number of friends precisely for that purpose. It is not to say that everyone was.

Yes, we are strong allies with Japan today. This astonishing Nation, above any nation in the world, forgives enemies, forgives acts of war and tries to live in civilized harmony more than any nation in the history of mankind.

So inasmuch as we are now allies with Japan, the events of World War II seem ever so much more distant and the hysteria ever so much more absurd. It is hard to imagine what was taking place. But to superimpose the peacetime mentality of today on the past and to judge our predecessors on that account is, as Jim Kilpatrick noted in a recent column, "The hindsight wisdom of a Monday morning quarterback."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Kilpatrick column be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit No. 1.)

Mr. WALLOP. The bottom line is that if we are set on judging our ancestors, better we put ourselves in their place rather than placing them in ours. To do so yields a different set of conclusions than those drawn by the Commission on Wartime Relocation and set forth in this bill.

Those who will join me in opposing this bill will point out that the Congress back in 1948 authorized monetary compensation to internees and that some $37 million in claims were paid. Others will note the fact that President Ford officially recognized that the internment was a mistake and repealed the excutive order that authorized it. Those are undeniable facts.

But what troubles me most about this legislation is that we are subscribing to what strikes me as a repugnant and an offensive idea—that a clear conscience is to be had for a mere $20,000 a head. Why settle on that figure? Had we paid $1,000 or even $19,000, would we still be a nation with a conscience troubling us? Or had we offered $25,000, would the recipients count it as too much and return the $5,000? To me, Mr. President, this act demeans the Congress, demeans the United States and demeans the recipients. It is an act of astonishing materialism if this Nation, troubled by the events of the past, can purchase its honor, and that we can write a check and get back its honor.

Mr. President, honor does not come with a dollar sign attached to it.

That a great nation will apologize is something not unheard of in history, but you do not buy it back. It is not a dollar figure that will do anything about this wrong, if so wrong it was and so bad were our ancestors, that they, fearing for the survival of their country, did something which at the time they thought was correct. There was not a dishonorable act. Hindsight might well prove that there were other options, but that was the option of a nation on the first days of war. It was the option of a nation which had lost numbers and numbers of its own soldiers and sailors who were attacked, not by Americans of Japanese descent or Japanese living in America, but by the nation of Japan. And our Nation was responding to what it thought was a threat to its survival as a democracy.

The Nation did not simply think it was a threat. In fact we flat knew that we were going to the wall as a matter of survival.

Theory that proponents of this legislation would have us accept that it is possible to assign a dollar value to a concept like freedom. I would say tell that to the Jews who suffered at Hitler's hands. Tell that to a Sakharov, or Orloff or Shcharansky. Tell it to Armondo Valladares, a great Cuban who suffered in Castro's jail. Moreover, if reparations are due one set of Americans who suffered thus, what of the rest of the Americans who suffered during the Second World War and who lost loved ones overseas, or who were held in captivity by the Japanese in the Philippines, or the Germans in Germany, or indeed the Russians in the Soviet Union.

If we are determined to atone for the sins of our parents and grandparents in this manner, perhaps we owe some monetary apology to the descendents of slaves, to the Cherokee Indians who endured the Trail of Tears, or to the Chinese-Americans who were pressed into virtual servitude building the transcontinental railroad and suffered a major massacre in a town in my State.

To me it is sad that this Congress thinks that the remedy for inequity, and justice, and the loss of personal freedom is dollars. One has but to denominate it and our national guilt is assuaged.

As former Member of Congress, Dan Lungren, a member of the Commission on Wartime Relocation, noted,

> Do we really believe that nothing can be genuine unless it involves the coin of the realm?

Mr. President, the bill not only sets a bad precedent but in the eloquent words of my constitutents, "only puts further disgrace upon this whole disgraceful episode in American history."

Mr. President, it had been my intention to offer an amendment which I will discuss and will not offer. In considering the bill to pay restitution to a people who were denied their lives and their livelihoods during a time of national crisis, we ought to consider the rest of what is implied here.

It seems to me that if this Congress feels that we owe a monetary apology for the actions of past generations, and can ease our collective conscience by so doing, then maybe we ought to consider cleaning the slate for other Government policies that today seem unjustified and incomprehensible.

Perhaps if this is the day of atonement for the U.S. Congress and if assuaging our national guilt is the goal, we should amend this bill to provide monetary compensation for other groups who have suffered under Government policies.

We should, I think, address the descendants of the Cherokees forced to walk the Trail of Tears. I have drafted an amendment to do just that. Maybe we have no historical memory but some of us remember of Trail of Tears from our history classes and some of us remember that from the fact that we grew up with Indian peoples.

Considering the issue we have before us here today, it is instructive to repeat that particular history lesson.

The Cherokees, under court order, had to adhere to the terms of the 1835 Treaty of New Echota which required them to surrender their land and move west of the Mississippi. The Indians were literally forced off their lands by local whites who ran off livestock and burned their homes. Troops under the command of Gen. Winfield Scott rounded up these Indians and drove them into concentration camps where they were held until they were sent in detachments of 1,000 people each on the fateful journey. In all some 15,000 Cherokees, under military force, walked from Georgia to Oklahoma. Winter approached, many fell ill and died along the way. Supplies ran short. The military escort refused to allow the Indians to even care for their sick or bury their dead. Some 4,000 Native Americans died.

Mr. President, this is also a tragic chapter in American history. If it is not, I do not know what is. The same thing happened to the Cheyenne people, forced out of their lands in Wyoming and Colorado into an area in Oklahoma called The Nations, from which they later escaped. They ran all the way north back up through Wyoming, and ended up in Montana, their great leader killed, and their nation confined to the northern part of the State. The southern Cheyenne still live in Oklahoma.

These people were deprived of their way of life as were the Cherokees who were forced into concentration camps, and forced on a thousand mile-plus march which killed more than a quarter of them, all due to the policies of our ancestors.

If we are compelled to offer redress to Japanese-Americans, should we not also offer some monetary atonement for the sins of our forefathers, for those on the Trail of Tears, for those forced back to The Nations?

Mr. President, I will not offer my proposed amendment, which is simple enough. It simply says:

> No funds shall be appropriated under this title until the U.S. Government has also fairly compensated the descendants of the victims of the Trail of Tears.

The reason I will not offer it is that I do not think you can buy that back, either.

This Nation suffers from what it did to those people. They suffer yet from what was done and remains done to them. But America's honor is not for sale and it is not for purchase, in either direction. Monetary policy does not buy it, nor can it be sold.

That is what we are being asked to do. I think that in many respects we are not being asked to do that by the people the sponsors seek to compensate. I think this is genuinely a product of something else, although I am not exactly sure what, and I am not accusing anybody of anything. I am stating that my philosophical difference with the bill's sponsors is that I do not think you can buy, or sell, or barter honor. Nor can you, buy or sell or barter conscience.

I guess the only thing I am asking that Senators do is to reflect on what kind of precedent we are settling into today, whether we are prepared to do that in the future, and whether materialism is the measure by which America's reputation henceforth is to be judged.

EXHIBIT NO. 1

$1.2 BILLION WORTH OF HINDSIGHT

(By James J. Kilpatrick)

Now pending on the Senate's calendar, subject to floor debate at any time, is a bad bill that comes to us laden which good intentions. At a cost of $1.2 billion, the bill would pay $20,000 each to those surviving Americans of Japanese ancestry who were interned on the West Coast in World War II. The measure ought to be quietly retired.

It is not easy—it is probably futile—to oppose the Senate bill. It heads for the floor bearing the names of 75 sponsors. A companion measure passed the House last September by a vote of 243-141. Only a heart of stone, it is said, could fail to be moved by the injustice visited upon loyal American citizens 46 years ago. It is time to apologize, we are told; it is time to make amends.

The trouble with that compassionate plea is that it comes to us through a rear-view mirror. It embodies the hind-sight wisdom of the Monday morning quarterback. The bill carries a finding that "there was no military or security reason for the internment," but that is the conclusion now. It assuredly was not the conclusion then.

Two generations have grown up since the Japanese launched their attack on Pearl Harbor. Today we count the Japanese as friends and allies. In the winter of 1941-42 they were enemies. Today it seems absurd to imagine that the Japanese might have invaded California. This seemed not at all absurd at the time. In 1988 we scarcely can imagine risks of sabotage and espionage. Reasonable men vividly perceived them then.

Acting upon these fears, Congress authorized President Roosevelt to issue what become Executive Order 9066. Pursuant to that order, the commanding general of West Coast forces proclaimed Civilian Exclusion Order No. 34. After May 9, 1942, more than 110,000 U.S. citizens of Japanese descent were to be uprooted from their homes. They were taken by train to internment camps. There they remained until the war's end in 1945. An estimated 60,000 survive.

As the Supreme Court noted in the case of Korematsu v. United States, most of the internees were loyal Americans. But some were not. More than 5,000 of them refused to swear allegiance to the United States and to renounce allegiance to the emperor. Several thousand evacuees requested repatriation to Japan. It is all very well to say today that these citizens should have received fair hearings, but in the spring of 1942 we were involved in a desperate war for national survival. Due process had to yield to the exigencies of the day.

The exclusion order came before the high court in 1944. By a vote of 6-3 the court upheld the order. Justice Hugo Black, one of the great civil libertarians of all time, wrote the opinion. Felix Frankfurter and William O. Douglas agreed. Listen to what Black said:

"We are not unmindful of the hardships imposed by the exclusion order upon a large group of American citizens. But hardships are part of war, and war is an aggregation of hardships. All citizens alike, both in and out of uniform, feel the impact of war in greater or lesser measure . . . . Compulsory exclusion of large groups of citizens from their homes, except under circumstances of direst emergency, is inconsistent with our basic governmental institutions. But when under conditions of modern warfare our shores are threatened by hostile forces, the power to protect must be commensurate with the threatened danger."

In looking back on those days, we ought to take guidance from Lord Macaulay. This was the precept of that great historian: "As we would have our descendants judge us, so we ought to judge our fathers. In order to form a correct estimate of their merits, we ought to place ourselves in their situation, to put out of our minds, for a time, all that knowledge which they could not have and we could not help having . . . . It is too much that the benefactors of mankind, after having been reviled by the dunces of their generation for going too far, should be reviled by the dunces of the next generation for not going far enough."

Rep. Bill Frenzel of Minnesota made the same point in House debate: "What a funny way to ask us to rub ashes on our heads! The bill asks us to purge ourselves of someone's else's guilt with another generation's money." No penance, no payments and no apology are required. The past is past. Let it stay that way.

Mr. WALLOP. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. MIKULSKI). The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1969

(Purpose: To insure that the Act is not construed as a weakening of the resolve of the United States not to relinquish any further national territory and to require the President to seek compensation for the descendents of the Aleut Indians removed from Wrangel Island)

Mr. HELMS. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) proposes an amendment numbered 1969.

At the end of the committee substitute add the following new section:

"Sec. . Notwithstanding any other provision of law or of this Act, nothing in this Act shall be construed as recognition of any claim of Mexico or any other country or any Indian tribe (except as expressly provided in this Act with respect to the Aleut tribe of Alaska) to any territory or other property of the United States, nor shall it be construed as providing any basis for compensation in connection with any such claim; provided, further, that the President shall seek appropriate compensation from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for the descendents of the Aleut Indians forcibly removed in 1924 from Wrangel Island by the Soviet Gunboat "Red October" and thereafter illegally interned in the Soviet Union where many died in conditions of deplorable hardship.".

Mr. HELMS. Madam President, it may be that the distinguished managers of the bill want to accept this amendment, because it does no harm to their purposes and, indeed, it seeks to preclude the pending underlying legislation from being used as a precedent to give standing to any person or future claim on the part of any country.

In Mexico City today, there stands a large museum of intervention. At its entrance is a large figure of Uncle Sam, meant to represent the United States, holding an ax, chopping off a huge chunk of what the museum, which is owned and operated by the Mexican Government, says is Mexico.

Let us look at that and think about it. The territory that this museum and the Government of Mexico are talking about includes all of the State of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Nevada, and Utah, and large parts of Colorado, Wyoming, and Kansas.

Now, Madam President, I am informed, but frankly I have not yet been able to get the CRS to verify it, that various Mexican citizens have filed suit in the American courts to seek return of all this territory to Mexico.

We say, well, that is not going to happen; we do not have any idea that the courts will do this.

But we better be safe about it. Therefore, I am offering the amendment which is intended to preclude, as I say, this legislation from being used as a precedent in the courts or elsewhere to give standing to any precedent or future claims on the part of Mexico or Mexicans or any other citizen or group claiming to have been dealt an injustice by the American Government at some time in the past.

This is an insurance policy. That is all this amendment is.

Of course, the claims for Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Nevada, Utah, and large parts of Colorado, Wyoming, and Kansas, are probably going nowhere.

But in 1945, the very same thing would have been said about the Panamanian claims to the United States territory and property in the Panama Canal Zone. So you never know.

You are using a little bit of paper and a little bit of ink to write in this safeguard in this bill to prevent this bill from being considered by anybody as a precedent for such action.

The other part of the amendment, Madam President, directs the President to seek compensation for the Aleut Indians who were forcibly removed from Wrangel Island by the Soviet warship Red October whose crew landed on Wrangel Island and made prisoners of its American inhabitants by seizing the territory and incarcerating Americans citizens in hard-labor camps on the Soviet mainland where many, including Charles Wells from Seattle, WA, the leader of that settlement, died in captivity.

The descendants of the Aleuts who settled on Wrangel Island and who were written off by our Government probably because of their race certainly should be compensated for this injustice.

But be that as it may, I think we ought to write in this safeguard so that this legislation cannot in the future be used as a precedent for any foolishness like that.

So I hope that our distinguished colleague from Alaska will give particular support to the amendment, and I hope that the managers of the bill would consider accepting it. Otherwise, I will ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE STEALTH BOMBER

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, the Air Force has announced some actions today, and released information about the progress and plans for the demonstration of the Stealth bomber. Funding figures have now been released regarding this program, the classified details of which have been well protected over the last decade. In addition, the general design of the revolutionary plane, in the form of a flying wing, is exciting, and is clearly on the cutting edge of aircraft design in the world. I am pleased, as well, that the level of confidence on the development of the technology has led the Air Force to project a flight test this year.

This has been a model program from all respects. It has been a textbook example of cooperation between the two parties, having been given the green light during the Carter administration, with the strong leadership of a DOD team led by Secretary Harold Brown and Under Secretary Bill Perry. It is also a model of executive-congressional relations at their best with the full active participation of the Senate Armed Services Committee at every step of the way. The leadership of that committee, retired Senators John Tower of Texas and Barry Goldwater of Arizona, helped guide the program during the early 1980's, and Senators SAM NUNN and JOHN WARNER steered the effort during the last several years.

I am a strong supporter of the Stealth Program and, during some especially difficult days for the program, during the years 1981-83, I authored a series of floor amendments with the close support and cooperation of Senators NUNN and WARNER and others. Those amendments protected the program and highlighted its importance by preventing the funds from being reprogrammed into other accounts, and avoiding competition between the B-1B and the much more advanced technology represented in the Stealth bomber.

I commend the leadership of the Armed Services Committee for taking a strong stand in the annual DOD conference committees with the other body and keeping the funding for the program at a level which would not degrade the development and timetables of the technologies associated with this system. It is to the credit of the Senate committee that the annual conference compromise kept the program at acceptable levels.

Madam President, technology is the cutting edge of our advantage over the Soviets. This program will force the Soviets to either revamp their air defense system, at the cost of many, many billions of dollars, or leave the Soviet heartland vulnerable to this system. Even with the revamping, Soviet vulnerability will remain high well into the next century. The allocation of Soviet resources to defend against this aircraft diverts resources away from Soviet offensive systems, an outcome which is highly desirable for United States defense planning.

I look forward to the further development and operational deployment of the Stealth bomber. I am hopeful that the test scheduled for this fall will go forward successfully and on schedule, and I will continue to support progress on this important defense system.

SCHEDULE

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I hope that the Senate will be able to make continuing progress on the pending matter before the Senate. I understand that there are not many more amendments, perhaps one or two or three, and if we complete action on this bill we can go out very soon and return to the constitutional amendment. The Senate has adopted the conference report on the Elementary and Secondary Education Act today. Perhaps we can be ready for the trade conference when it comes to the Senate from the House, and I have been discussing with Senator CHILES today the budget conference. I hope to be discussing that at some point with the Speaker of the House.

So, we are making progress. We have a little time left today. I do not want to be in longer than 5:30 or 6 or 6:30 or 7 or 7:30 today. But we can easily make the 5:30 recess if Senators will come to the floor.

I yield to the distinguished Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. As I understand it, there may only be two or three additional amendments, and I hope that we can complete action on this bill. But I would then propound a question. Is it probable we might take up the trade conference report on Friday? Is that a possibility?

Mr. BYRD. If we can get it from the House and get consent. I have not talked with Senator BENTSEN about it—about Friday. I talked with him today about my hopes that we can go to it Monday.

I would like to go to it Friday if we can move the pending measure and the constitutional amendment, move it tomorrow. I would certainly put the trade conference report, I think, ahead of the AIDS legislation except we have AIDS locked in. But it is locked in and it would not be a difficult matter, with consent, to go to the trade legislation and we could delay the AIDS legislation until after the Senate acts on the trade conference report. This should not create any adverse reaction on either side in this Chamber because the AIDS legislation is locked in already by unanimous consent.

The sooner the Senate can proceed to consideration of the trade conference report the sooner it can be finalized and sent to the White House for the President's signature, I hope. The sooner we could complete action on the trade conference the sooner the Senate will go out for the Memorial Day break. That break is to begin next Friday at the close of business, but if we can complete the action on the trade conference report and if the budget conference report is ready, if that conference report can be completed and the AIDS legislation and the constitutional amendment, the pending measure, why, I think we can go home with our heads held high and feeling that we have advanced the interests of the people.

I would have to have some assurance that the President would not veto that trade legislation at a time when, because the Senate was out of session, it would prevent its return. The most important thing is that the House not be out of session because this particular legislation will go to the House first. It originated there. And that will be a matter I will discuss with the Speaker and then I will discuss that with the distinguished Republican leader.

But whatever the President does with the bill, I hope he will sign it or let it become law without his signature. That can happen under the Constitution unless the Congress, by virtue of its being in recess, prevents the return of the message. But we could schedule that, I think, in such a way with the House.

I hope that Senators will read the RECORD and listen to what I have said because this would give Senators an opportunity to get back to their constituents and be with them for a little longer period during the Memorial Day break.

Mr. DOLE. I think the amendments are all on this side, so I would urge any Senator on this side who has an amendment—I know Senator HELMS is here and prepared to proceed on his amendments. I think we are awaiting the Senator from Alaska, Senator STEVENS, to take a look at that amendment, and perhaps Senator GRASSLEY, I am advised, may have an amendment, and Senator HELMS may have an additional amendment.

As far as I know those are the only amendments. I hope we can arrange to dispose of the constitutional amendment without much additional debate.

Mr. BYRD. Right. It has been called to my attention that I referred to this next break as the Memorial Day recess. It is not the Memorial Day recess. It is the beginning of May. It happens to be one of the breaks that, in my experimental approach to Senate business and in my quality-of-work syndrome, I have a week break coming up. In view of the fact that it is an experimental break, it will be a memorial day break.

So in all seriousness, it seems to me that this is a good schedule. We have already accomplished a good deal since the last break, and if we could accomplish this, it seems to me we would be ahead of the curve. And we have the INF Treaty at some point, once the problem concerning futuristic technology is clarified. That is on the calendar.

Welfare reform, I believe, has been reported out of the Finance Committee.

Once the budget conference report has been agreed to, appropriations bills will be coming over from the House, and we can begin acting on appropriations bills separately and individually, and they can go down to the President.

Then prior to that time, depending upon the President's reaction to the trade bill, at some point, we will take up the United States-Canadian trade agreement.

So it is not too large an agenda. It is a rather simple agenda, but it has some important measures in it. Finding the cooperation that has been demonstrated by the Republican leadership, it seems to me we might be successful in disposing of this agenda and not have to be in when the snow is falling and the leaves are even falling.

Mr. DOLE. I understand the distinguished Senator from Utah wishes to speak. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield, and I thank the Senators.

APPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the President pro tempore, and upon the recommendation of the minority leader of the Senate, pursuant to Public Law 100-203, appoints the following individuals to the National Economic Council: Senator PETE DOMENICI and Mr. Dean Kleckner.

WARTIME RELOCATION OF CIVILIANS—S. 1009

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, with the permission of the Senator from North Carolina, that his amendment, which is pending, be temporarily set aside so I can present an amendment which I believe the majority floor manager will accept.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1970

(Purpose: To strike the language limiting appointment to some of the positions on the Board of Directors on the basis of national origin)

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] proposes an amendment numbered 1970.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 43, line 16, beginning with "At", strike through line 17.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I rise today as a cosponsor of S. 1009. As I have publicly stated, I believe that an appropriate form of restitution is in order for the obvious civil rights abuses that were suffered by interned American citizens in 1942. During the period of internment, many U.S. citizens were separated from their families, and some lost all of their property and material possessions. Despite various court rulings since that time, it is clear that these citizens were denied their constitutional right to due process.

The bill that we are acting upon today is truly an important step in correcting that denial of due process, and I intend to support its final passage. However, I do have a concern with one portion of the bill which may in itself result in another violation of due process.

Section 206 of the bill creates a nine member board of directors that is charged with the responsibility of making various disbursements from a trust fund. One of the requirements of this section is that five members of the board be of Japanese ancestry. While I have no problem with the concept of the board of directors making disbursements from the trust fund, I am very concerned with the requirement that some of the appointments to the board be made on the basis of national origin.

Under the Supreme Court's interpretation of equal protection as provided by the fifth amendment due process clause, Congress may not, absent some compelling governmental interest, make a distinction based on national origin. When called on to review such a law, the Supreme Court applies strict scrutiny; that is, its highest standard of review in discrimination cases.

On its face, there appears to be nothing in this legislation that would indicate some over-riding governmental interest that makes it imperative to set aside five of the nine positions. The functions that will be performed by the board, can be performed regardless of ancestry.

It is also possible that this language violates the Presidental appointments clause in the Constitution by dictating to the President which persons he can appoint. To include this provision would be an invitation for a judicial challenge on constitutional grounds and could lead to a veto.

To the best of my determinaton, this issue has not been raised during consideration of the bill in the Senate or the House of Representatives. It would be unfortunate if we overwhelmingly enact this measure only to have someone challenge this provision, invalidating the board of directors and thereby removing the entity we have charged with making awards under the bill.

The amendment that I am introducing today simply removes the clause requiring specific national origin in appointing persons to the five positions. The board remains intact, and we avoid at least one constitutional challenge which would surely be made.

I encourage all of my colleagues to support this amendment, and I will go on further to say that I think with this correction, if the distinguished managers of the bill will accept this amendment, my encouragement would be to the White House and to those who actually make these appointments that they take into consideration our natural desires to have people of Japanese ancestry on this board. I even believe there will be no objection to basically doing what the bill mandates being done, but doing it on a voluntary basis under circumstances that would be more constitutional than if we leave the bill as it is.

So I ask whether or not my distinguished collegue from Hawaii is willing to accept this amendment and, if he is, I would be very pleased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Utah for calling this provision to my attention. As I read it and as others with legal training may read it, it might be deemed unconstitutional, and may provide the Chief Executive with a reason for vetoing the measure.

So I join with the Senator from Utah who has been a cosponsor of the measure from the very beginning. Incidentally, I might say to the Senator from Utah that I used the fact that if a conservative Senator such as Senator HATCH could cosponsor this measure, other Senators should see their way clear to cosponsor.

Mr. HATCH. I know you used my name in such a fashion and was very happy that you did.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. So I, as manager of this side, am more than willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator, and I think it does correct a noticeable constitutional defect in the bill. Like I say, although there is nothing binding upon those who make the appointments, I certainly think there will be a good-faith effort to do so. At least, I hope so. So I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1970) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I thank my colleague.

Mr. HELMS. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RIEGLE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1969, AS MODIFIED

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send a modification of my amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment. The amendment is so modified.

The amendment (No. 1969), as modified, is as follows:

> At the end of the committee substitute add the following new section:
> "SEC. —. Notwithstanding any other provision of law or of this Act, nothing in this Act shall be construed as recognition of any claim of Mexico or any other country or any Indian tribe (except as expressly provided in this Act with respect to the Aleut tribe of Alaska) to any territory or other property of the United States, nor shall it be construed as providing any basis for compensation in connection with any such claim."

Mr. HELMS. As modified, I inquire of our distinguished managers of the bill if they are willing to accept it?

Mr. STEVENS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I have advised the distinguished majority manager of the bill that in my judgment, as modified, the amendment states that:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of law or of this Act, nothing in this Act shall be construed as recognition of any claim of Mexico or any other country or any Indian tribe (except as expressly provided in this Act with respect to the Aleut tribe of Alaska) to any territory or other property of the United States, nor shall it be construed as providing any basis for compensation in connection with any such claim.

I have no objection to that.

I do not believe such is the case, but I see nothing wrong with stating it as an affirmative fact that there is no other claim being presented in this act other than that of the Japanese-Americans and of the Aleut-Alaskan-Americans.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I have no objection at all so long as the Senator from Alaska is willing to accept it. I will go along and accept it. I have no objection to it.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. I thank both Senators. In case anybody has any modicum of interest as to the modification of the amendment because of a difference of understanding about the historical aspects of Alaska, I certainly will not debate with the Senator from Alaska on that. But I can handle that aspect on previous legislation. I suggest we vote on the modified amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS].

The amendment (No. 1969), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. STEVENS. Would the Senator withhold?

Mr. HELMS. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS. Let me thank the distinguished Senator from North Carolina for his consideration. I look forward at some time to exploring further the historical aspects of the Wrangell Islands with my good friend and other Members of the Senate. We have talked about them a great deal.

They are islands that are westward of the line of demarkation of the treaty purchase by which the United States acquired Alaska in 1867 from Russia, from the czar of Russia. These islands, and there are a whole series in that area, have had a history in regard to Alaskan citizens and some of it is very colorful.

As a matter of fact, I will tell the Presiding Officer that he might be very interested in the fact that it was in 1924 that a crew of a Soviet vessel arrived at Wrangell Island, hoisted the Soviet flag and transferred part of the occupants then of Wrangell Island to Siberia. As a matter of fact, there is some dispute about where they actually went. But the name of that vessel, for the trivia in history lesson of the day, was Red October.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I see.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. HELMS. Yes.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. It is my understanding the Senator has one more amendment. Am I correct?

Mr. HELMS. I shall make the Senator happy. That is correct.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Then we can go to final passage.

Mr. HELMS. Yes, unless there is some other Senator who comes with an amendment that I do not know of.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HELMS. I will say to the Senator from Alaska that I am grateful to him for his input. I guess I was thrown off by my understanding that the Alaska Legislature perhaps in a resolution claimed these islands. Is that not so?

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is my understanding the Alaska Legislature explored this subject. One house of the legislature passed a resolution concerning the status of Wrangell Islands. To my knowledge we have never claimed Wrangell Islands as being part of the State of Alaska.

Mr. HELMS. Further compounding my confusion was that I believed the story that I read in the Washington Post, and that is always a dangerous thing to do. But in any case, I thank the Senator.

AMENDMENT NO. 1971

(Purpose: To require the Government of Japan to compensate the families of the men and women killed as a result of the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, before any awards are paid out under the Act)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, here is the last one. I send an unprinted amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] proposes an amendment numbered 1971.

On page 46, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following new section:

JAPANESE PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION TO FAMILIES OF MEN AND WOMEN KILLED AT PEARL HARBOR

SEC. 208. No funds shall be appropriated under this title until the Government of Japan has fairly compensated the families of the men and women who were killed as a result of the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

As I said at the beginning of this debate, I know of no one in retrospect by 20-20 hindsight looking back 45 or 46 years who is proud of the internment or relocation of the Japanese-American citizens during World War II. I would reiterate just for the purpose of emphasis that there is no Member of this body for whom I have greater respect, admiration, and affection than the two Senators from Hawaii, Mr. MATSUNAGA and Mr. INOUYE. But I offer this amendment for two purposes: One is as a way of emphasizing the horror, the terror, the grave apprehension that motivated the then President of the United States operating on intelligence information provided to him, which had been verified, notwithstanding some of the claims of the Commission.

I think that if we go pell-mell into this thing without realizing the responsibility of the President of the United States at that time, indeed the responsibility of the President of the United States at any time, then we are doing injustice to him particularly since he is not here to defend himself.

I have already discussed the series of efforts made by the U.S. Government to compensate those who were harmed as a result of relocation. I guess it is a subjective judgment as to whether this Government did enough. But the underlying thought in my mind at this point is that we are going to punish millions of Americans who were not even born at that time who are now workers, taxpayers, and will be required to shoulder this $1.3 billion in addition to the $2 trillion national debt and the enormous deficits that we are still running around this place. This $1.3 billion will be paid by people who did not have a thing in the world to do with that decision, any more than they had to do with other injustices that have been perpetrated by various countries in times of stress.

However, I want to focus on the point that this was not a happenstance judgment by the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt. It was a situation in which, as he saw it at that time—he did not have the benefit of retroactively looking at it—but as he saw the situation at that time, based on the intelligence reports, it seemed to him to be the thing to do. I think that in fairness to him, that ought to be taken into consideration in our judgment on this piece of legislation.

If Congress passes this bill—and I have no doubt that it will; the House has already done so—as Congress deals with these individual payments, it certainly makes a mockery of our budget priorities. I suspect that there are thousands of families, survivors of gallant American Navy personnel who were killed or injured during the attack on Pearl Harbor.

So, I think fair is fair. Therefore, the amendment would provide that no funds shall be appropriated under this title until the Government of Japan has fairly compensated the families of the men and women who were killed as a result of the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941.

I am old enough to remember President Roosevelt addressing a joint session of Congress in the House Chamber, and I hear on the radio, even today, a replay of his remarks about a day of infamy.

True enough, these Japanese-Americans—certainly not SPARK MATSUNAGA or DAN INOUYE—had anything to do with it because they were fighting in the U.S. uniform and under the U.S. flag. Indeed, Senator INOUYE lost one of his arms. So I think I owe this to the families of our military personnel at Pearl Harbor who were either killed or injured.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I had hoped that I might ask the Senator from North Carolina to withdraw this amendment, but I respect his right to have a vote on it.

This amendment raises a very interesting question, and that is the complete failure of the United States to ask for any reparations from Japan following World War II. It does so by, however, putting a barrier against the provisions of this bill until the United States would do so, and I find that unacceptable.

This subject is very interesting, because there is no question that today we spend over $2 billion a year protecting the Japanese with our defense capability. We have assumed the defense of the Pacific.

Yet, this amendment would deny the benefits of this act to those whom the Commission has recommended to Congress that we provide assistance to and compensation to, until Congress and the United States change the policy which was established immediately subsequent to World War II, that we would not seek reparations from that country.

I say to the Senator from North Carolina that on another day, at another time, I might join him in a discussion of whether we should now seek reparations from Japan, in view of the actions of its nationals in Hawaii and on the west coast of the United States, in using the leverage of the yen to buy practically the residential areas of Hawaii and to acquire the mechanisms of our financial system on the west coast.

This raises in my mind some interesting rabbit trails, I say to my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, as the airline advertisement says, I am ready whenever you are.

Mr. STEVENS. I think I am ready for that, and I have been making some statements on the floor. I have made statements concerning the high cost of our defense of the Pacific and the very low contribution of the people of Japan to the defense of the free world. I am going to continue to raise questions concerning the role of the Japanese in defense of the free world and the lack of understanding by the leaders of that country of the position they should assume in terms of the dynamics of their society, following the generosity of our Nation in the late 1940's and the period subsequent to World War II.

I do not want to belabor this, Mr. President. This is an unacceptable condition to those of us who have worked on this legislation for years. In my judgment, it is not proper to put such a condition on the bill; and unless my good friend from Hawaii or the Senator from North Carolina wishes to debate it any further, I am prepared to offer a motion to table this amendment. With due respect to the Senator from North Carolina, I do not believe that this is an acceptable condition on a bill of this type.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alaska yield?

Mr. STEVENS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, this amendment is totally unacceptable as an amendment to S. 1009.

According to the distinguished Senator's amendment, funds appropriated under the provisions of the bill shall not be appropriated until the Government of Japan has fairly compensated the families of the men and women who were killed as a result of the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941.

The amendment presumes that we Americans of Japanese ancestry had something to do with the bombing of Pearl Harbor. That is absolutely false, as the Senator from North Carolina will readily concede. Japanese-Americans had nothing to do with that act.

In this bill we are trying to distinguish between Japanese-Americans and Japanese. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina would obscure this distinction by denying compensation to Americans for what the Japanese Government did at Pearl Harbor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I made that distinction with specific reference to Senator MATSUNAGA and Senator INOUYE. I want to say that with respect to the overwhelmingly vast majority of Japanese-Americans, I made that distinction. I will be glad to make it again, of course.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. If the Senator from North Carolina wishes to preserve that distinction I respectfully suggest that he should withdraw this amendment. Of course, if he does not, the Senator from Alaska will make a motion to table.

Mr. HELMS. Very well.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina that is pending and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alaska to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] are necessary absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] is absent because of illness.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WIRTH). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 91, nays 4, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 1971 was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to table was agreed to.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I want to state to the manager of the bill, my good friend from Hawaii, there are no further amendments on this side to my knowledge. I have inquired and there will be no further amendments on this side.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I thank the Senate from Alaska. We have no further amendments on this side.

Mr. STEVENS. Third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, history is not ours to rewrite. History is ours to clarify, to understand, and to build upon.

One of the most difficult and unpleasant events in America's recent past was the internment of American citizens and resident aliens of Japanese ancestry during World War II. Beginning in February 1942, shortly after the attack on Pearl Harbor, all persons of Japanese ancestry on the west coast were forced to evacuate.

Given as few as 72 hours to prepare, 120,000 individuals of Japanese ancestry were forced to leave their homes, their personal and business property, and their livelihoods.

They were taken to camps throughout the interior of the United States, including one in Santa Fe, NM, and held for about 4 years.

This national policy continued until December 1944. The last camp was closed in January 1946.

This sad period in our history has been examined with care by the Commission on the Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, established by Congress. The Commission issued its report, "Personal Justice Denied," in 1982.

In January 1986, the U.S. District Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia ruled, in a class action suit, that individuals of Japanese descent who lost property because of their relocation from the west coast during World War II have a cause of action against the United States for those losses.

Thus, both the Commission and the court of appeals reached the same basic conclusion, the evacuation of persons of Japanese ancestry, in the words of the Commission, "was not justified by military necessity, and the decisions which followed from it . . . were not driven by an analysis of military conditions."

The Commission concluded that "the broad historical causes which shaped these decisions were race prejudice, war hysteria and a failure of political leadership."

Computed in 1983 dollars, the estimated losses of income and property are between $810 million and $2 billion.

Mr. President, those are the historical facts. Those are the reasons that I am a cosponsor of S. 1009, Accepting the Findings and Implementing the Recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians.

This bill has been reported by the Committee on Governmental Affairs. I think it is useful to relate what that Committee said.

The committee "concluded that to uphold the deeply held American belief in equality and liberty for all persons, regardless of race, sex, color or national origin, it is appropriate to adopt the Commission's recommendation for remedies in several forms as an act of national apology."

The committee goes on to find that "restitution payments signal our Nation's clear commitment to acknowledging the harm that can result when national passion is directed at primarily American-born citizens with certain racial characteristics. The ultimate goal of this legislation is to prevent the occurrence of another similar event."

I believe, Mr. President, that if we, as a nation, are to build successfully upon the lessons of this unfortunate policy, we must first compensate the surviving victims—about 60,000 Americans of Japanese descent.

This bill authorizes a tax-free restitution payment of $20,000 to each person of Japanese descent who was relocated, interned, or otherwise deprived of liberty during World War II. The estimated total cost is $1.3 billion, a total that includes payments of $12,000 each to about 500 Aleuts of Alaska for the destruction of personal property caused by the U.S. military occupation of Aleut villages during World War II.

Mr. President, the passage of this bill is an important event in the history of our Nation. Our future strength as a nation depends greatly on our commitment to the founding principles of the United States, and our willingness to make restitution when we have departed from these principles.

The Japanese citizens and resident aliens who were relocated from the west coast during World War II are a test of our national commitment to equality and freedom for all persons.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this legislation, offering a national apology and restitution for the great injustice done to United States citizens and resident aliens of Japanese ancestry during World War II.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise to explain my vote against S. 1009, the Japanese-Americans reparations bill.

I do so with regret because what happened to a great many loyal, Japanese-Americans after the bombing of Pearl Harbor caused them unjustified personal hardships and deprivations.

Yes, these citizens should have received fair hearings and due process. But in the spring of 1942, we were in a desperate war for national survival.

One of the great civil libertarians of our time, Justice Hugo Black, wrote the Supreme Court opinon upholding the relocation of over 110,000 U.S. citizens of Japanese descent from the Western United States. Justice Black stated:

> Compulsory exclusion of large groups of citizens from their homes, except under circumstances of direct emergency, is inconsistent with our basic governmental institutions. But when under conditions of modern warfare our shores are threatened by hostile forces, the power to protect must be commensurate with the threatened danger.

> * * * because the properly constituted military authorities feared an invasion of our west coast and felt constrained to take proper security measures * * * the military authorities considered that the need for action was great, and time was short. We cannot—by availing ourselves of the calm perspective of hindsight—now say that at the time these actions were unjustified.

Justice Black's opinion was joined by Justice William O. Douglas, perhaps the greatest civil libertarian of our time.

It may be hard to understand these sentiments now—over 46 years after the fact. Today, we have the benefit of hindsight; we can easily renounce what was done. But maybe we need to place ourselves in the minds of those who made this decision at the time; without the luxury of all the knowledge that we now possess.

However unjust and inequitable the relocations were, there is something about monetary reparations to assuage our guilt that does not sit well with me. I do not believe that we atone for past transgressions by holding today's taxpayer accountable for the actions of the Government of over 46 years ago—by paying out over $1.3 billion in a time of record Federal budget deficits.

Even the Relocation Commission stated that "no amount of money can fully compensate (these) people for their losses and sufferings."

In 1983, I chaired a Judiciary subcommittee hearing on similar legislation. During the hearing, Representative LUNGREN, a member of the Commission, pointed out to the subcommittee that over $37 million has been paid by the U.S. Government to those internees who had provable real and personal property losses. I don't understand how giving $20,000 to each survivor of the internment camps will help to restore their honor or that of the United States.

During the debate of similar legislation in the other body, Representative FRENZEL said "what a funny way to ask us to rub ashes on our heads. The bill asks us to purge ourselves of someone else's guilt with another generation's money."

What happened to these Americans was wrong. And as difficult as it is for individuals to admit when they are wrong, governments seem to find it even more so. However, it was wrong and we should be mature enough to say so.

Anything beyond this will not make anyone, the Government or the individual internee, whole.

A LONG OVERDUE APOLOGY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am proud to join the distinguished Senator from Hawaii, Senator MATSUNAGA, as one of the original cosponsors of this legislation.

I fought for this Nation in World War II. Many others in the Congress also fought in that war, or in Korea or Vietnam. All of us were fighting for a common purpose: to preserve America, and all it stands for.

It is a tragic irony that, at the very moment I and millions of others were fighting for America's ideals, America itself—our country—was engaging in one of the most terrible acts of injustice in our entire history.

Thousands of Japanese-Americans were interned, for no crime other than being born in Japan, or being descendants of Japanese or Japanese-American parents. They were interned under procedures which had a veneer of law, but which—at their heart—were inimical to the fundamental principles of law and justice embodied in our Constitution and characterizing almost all of our history.

We owe these people—these loyal Americans—a profound apology. For what they suffered. We owe them, and ourselves, the kind of educational effort envisioned by this bill, so that this kind of communal injustice can never happen again in this country.

This bill is a major first step in paying back to these Americans—and to the memory of their families and friends who have already passed on—what this country owes them.

I offer my heartfelt congratulations to SPARKY MATSUNAGA, and DAN INOUYE who has turned this idea into legislation.

This bill is an authorization bill. Like other authorization bills in the age of 12-digit budget deficits, it will undergo careful scrutiny in the appropriations process. It is one extremely worthy effort, but it must be evaluated along with other projects worthy in their own right. There is much we have an obligation to do, but we can't do it all, now.

But, certainly and at a minimum, we can do this: we can go on record acknowledging this terrible wrong that was done. We can go on record offering this deserved national apology to thousands of Americans whose honor and reputations have long been unfairly stained.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I rise today as a cosponsor of the Japanese-American redress bill. Nearly 50 years ago, America was at war. We won the war, but in facing our enemy, we perpetrated a terrible wrong on a group of our own citizens here at home. Over 100,000 Japanese-Americans, 70 percent of whom were American citizens, were uprooted from their homes and businesses along the coasts of California, Washington and my own State of Oregon and forced to spend the balance of World War II in relocation camps, behind barbed wire fences. These citizens, men, women and children, were treated like traitors by their own Government for no other reason than their heritage. We took away their homes and their livelihoods. We stripped them of their civil liberties. That is our shame and dishonor.

America's reaction to the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor during World War II is an example of how our country's collective passion obscrued our judgment. We rounded up the Americans of Japanese ancestry and placed them in our version of concentration camps. For those of us on the Pacific coast it was a chilling experience, because we have a long history of Asian settlement. Over 4,000 Japanese-Americans were uprooted from the western portion of Oregon for relocation during the war. It is peculiar that this internment took place when naval intelligence and other sources, now available under the Freedom of Information Act, indicate the intelligence assessment was that these Americans were not a danger. We knew they were not a danger, but we were so frightened that we uprooted them and punished them for their heritage and their physical resemblance to our enemy at that time.

The internment of Japanese-Americans in relocation camps and the uprooting of the Aleuts from the Aleutian and Pribilof Islands in the Pacific during World War II are not the only examples of reacting to unfounded fear and not reason. American history reveals several sorry examples of how Congress or the President can violate our civil liberties. It was Woodrow Wilson's Attorney General who lent his name to the infamous "Palmer red raids" in which efforts were made to round up alleged "red" sympathizers in 1920. It was President Franklin Roosevelt, with the immediate concurrence of Congress, who authorized the internment of native born American citizens of Japanese ancestry in World War II. It was a Congress that abused our liberties during the McCarthy era of the 1950's. It was the President who abused our liberties during the Watergate era.

These examples should serve as reminders that governing officials, in democracies as well as dictatorships, may find it convenient to bend to transitory, popular prejudices that would trammel, or even extinguish, our individual liberties for the alleged common good. We must remain ever diligent to protect individual liberty and freedom.

I am glad that the U.S. Senate is taking this opportunity to correct the mistake the Government committed in interning Japanese-Americans over 40 years ago. Today we have the chance not only to apologize to our citizens and their families but also to show we learn from our mistakes as a nation. Although the reparations contained in this bill will never be able to provide full restitution to those who suffered the stigma of being perceived as disloyal to their Government, we have an obligation to redress the wrongs against Japanese-Americans and acknowledge our error. Congress must pass this legislation and pray we as a nation never have a reason to pass such a measure again.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 1009, legislation introduced by my friend and colleague, Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA, to redress a grievous wrong. On rare occasions has this Nation flagrantly denied the civil rights and liberties of its citizens in the interests of national security. It occurred once during the Civil War when President Lincoln suspended the writ of habeas corpus. And it also occurred during World War II, when President Franklin Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9066.

This Executive order, and the subsequent implementing legislation (Pub. L. 77-503), resulted in the roundup and internment of approximately 120,000 individuals of Japanese ancestry living on the west coast. Of these individuals, 77,000 were American citizens; the rest were legal and illegal resident aliens. This action was taken with virtually no notice or hearing. The individuals covered by the Executive order were forced to leave their homes and all belongings, except those that they could carry and were confined to detention camps for periods of up to 4 years. Most of them sold their homes and business holdings at extremely low prices and nearly all incurred substantial economic losses due to the evacuation. The loss of income and property to the interned individuals in 1983 has been estimated at between $810 million and $2 billion. Individuals of Japanese ancestry living outside of the west coast were never subject to the relocation.

Similarly, 900 Aleuts living on the Aleutian Islands were also relocated after the Japanese attacked the two westernmost islands of the Aleutian chain. They were housed in abandoned mines and canneries and many lacked adequate medical attention resulting in extensive disease and death. The military took over their homes and needlessly desecrated churches and other buildings.

Subsequent investigation has proven that there was no military or national security necessity for these actions. The internment occurred more out of fear and racial prejudice in the hysteria of the times. This longstanding blot on the civil liberties history of this country can perhaps be partially erased through some form of restitution. While monetary compensation cannot ease the pain and loss suffered by the individuals and families whose country turned its back on them, it will at least mark official U.S. recognition of this shortsighted Government action.

This bill makes an official apology to the U.S. citizens and resident aliens of Japanese ancestry who were interned. It authorizes $1.3 billion to be paid into a fund administered by the Treasury Department to make payments of $20,000 to the survivors of the internment. In return, those survivors who accept the restitution will waive any further claim against the Federal Government for their internment. It similarly makes a payment of $12,000 in compensation for the loss of property and liberty of the Aleuts.

It has been argued that this legislation is unnecessary or that it goes too far. The Justice Department claims that the 1948 Japanese-American Evacuation Claims Act provided sufficient compensation for the injured parties. In actuality, that act only provided compensation for 75 percent or the total value of approved real and personal property losses or $2,500—whichever was less. The act did not allow for loss of liberty, income or pain and suffering. It even placed an elaborate proof on loss on the injured parties.

Others have stated that this is too much money for the Government to be giving away in these times of budgetary restraint. I agree that times are tight and that we must do all that we can to reign in Government spending. I also believe, however, that we cannot put a price on the civil rights and liberties guaranteed by the Constitution whose bicentennial we have been celebrating for the past year. Also, the chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee, Senator GLENN, has offered technical amendments to strengthen this legislation and make it fiscally responsible. His amendments provide that this does not create a new entitlement program, but makes the ability to pay subject to appropriations. His amendments achieve other wise spending goals which are detailed elsewhere in the debate on this bill. I support his efforts as strongly as I do the underlying legislation.

Mr. President, this bill is based on the recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians. This Commission was established by Congress to study the issue and its recommendtions have broad bipartisan support.

I am a strong believer in the democratic principles upon which this country was founded. Just as we have spoken out strongly against the racially inspired policy of apartheid in South Africa and religious and civil repression in the Soviet Union and other Eastern bloc nations, so should we speak out against injustices that have occurred in this country. In the case of those citizens whose civil rights were denied by interment during the war, this Congress must do all that it can to ensure that such sweeping violations of civil liberties do not occur in the future.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I would like to pay tribute to my friend and colleague, SPARK MATSUNAGA. The fact that this legislation has more than 70 cosponsors is testimony to his diligent and dogged efforts to protect the civil rights of all Americans. He is a tenacious advocate of the rights of the individual who served this country valiantly during World War II; just as did his colleague from Hawaii, Senator INOUYE. The fact that we will soon be taking action on this legislation speaks loudly for his steadfast efforts to keep this issue on the Senate's agenda. I urge all my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I strongly support the legislation we are considering today, the Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians Act, sponsored by the distinguished Senator from Hawaii, Senator MATSUNAGA.

I am a cosponsor of this bill, and have supported similar legislation while serving in the House of Representatives, because I believe that the Congress and the President have an obligation to correct an intolerable injustice perpetrated against Americans of Japanese descent nearly 47 years ago.

The internment of Japanese-Americans during World War II is a sad episode in the history of the United States. Some 120,000 people of Japanese ancestry—80 percent of whom were native-born U.S. citizens—were taken from their homes, without having been accused of a crime, to live in bleak prison camps for the years during the war. According to one estimate, the interned Japanese-Americans lost between $149 million and $370 million in income and property for which no compensation was ever made—losses which, in 1983 dollars, would total between $810 million and $2 billion.

Since the end of the war, the Federal Government has maintained that the exclusion and internment were actions justified by military necessity. Thus, until recently, the detaineees have had no basic recourse in the courts or the Government for these injustices.

To remedy this situation, in 1980, the Congress formed the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians. The conclusions of the Commission revealed an abusive and prejudicial policy initiated and perpetuated by the Federal Government against a specific ethnic group. Government intelligence reports, discovered by the Commission, showed racial and ethnic suspicion as the basis for the program rather than military necessity. After careful consideration, the Commission declared the program a mistake resulting from racial prejudice and war hysteria, and recommended a series of actions by the United State Government to serve as an apology to Japanese-Americans deprived of their liberty during the World War II.

S. 1009, the bill we are considering today, would implement the Commission's recommendations by mandating a formal apology by Congress and establishing a trust fund out of which $20,000 would be paid to all Americans of Japanese ancestry who were deprived of their liberty and property under the internment program. The legislation also calls on the President to pardon anyone of Japanese ancestry who was convicted of violating the relocation orders but did not otherwise commit a crime. Lastly, the bill would establish similar restitution to residents of the Aleutian and Pribilof Islands also forcibly relocated during the war.

It is my hope that this legislation will serve as some compensation to those American citizens whose basic rights were taken from them by their Government without explanation. I commend the Senator from Hawaii for introducing this legislation and hope that my colleagues will join me in giving it their full support.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, in 1980, Congress established the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians to review the circumstances surrounding the internment of Japanese-Americans directed by Executive Order 9066 during World War II, and to make recommendations on appropriate remedies by the United States. The Commission has issued their report, and this legislation would implement their findings. I have concerns with this legislation which I would like to address.

However, before I comment on these concerns, it is appropriate to acknowledge the contributions of Americans of Japanese descent during World War II. Like most Americans, thousands of Japanese-American fought in the armed services to defend our country. There is no finer example of the sacrifice of Japanese-Americans than my colleagues from the great State of Hawaii who both served in World War II.

As a veteran of World War II, I am aware of the many injustices of war—the death of young soldiers on the battlefield, the destruction of property, and particularly the suffering of the civilian population. During wartime, civilians are faced with the loss of loved ones, and often are subjects of unjust action. These are the tragedies of war, and that is why we strive so hard to maintain and preserve peace.

Mr. President, this legislation consist of three titles. Title I contain an official apology to those citizens and resident aliens of Japanese ancestry who were evacuated, relocated, and interned during World War II. Title II establishes the Civil Liberties Education Fund and provides for restitution payments of $20,000 to eligible individuals. The final title authorizes compensation to the Aleutian Islands.

Mr. President, no one can dispute the fact that Japanese-Americans suffered undue hardships as a result of Executive Order 9066. The United States has acknowledged this error and has already taken compensatory action. The 1948 Japanese-American Evacuation Act awarded compensation for property losses that occurred as a result of exclusion or evacuation. This was the equitable way to address this matter in that it settled claims on an individual basis according to the losses suffered. I question the wisdom of the proposed blanket $20,000 restitution payment when many claims have been settled. In addition, there were different degrees of suffering in the Japanese-American community. Can we justify awarding the same monetary compensation to an individual who spent a week in internment as one who spent a more extended period?

In 1976, President Ford formally recognized that evacuation and internment of Japanese-Americans was a mistake, and he repealed Executive Order 9066. I believe that these actions by our Government have resolved this matter, and I think it would be unwise to allow the additional compensation and findings that this legislation would provide.

Mr. President, the Department of Justice has expressed reservations regarding this bill. I ask unanimous consent that the testimony before the Subcommittee on Federal Services, Post Office, and Civil Service of Mr. Richard Willard, Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division at the Justice Department, be printed in the RECORD after my remarks. Mr. Willard's testimony states legitimate reasons why the Justice Department would recommend a Presidential veto of this legislation.

I would like to particularly note the Department's objections to title II of S. 1009. One of the provisions of this section would require the Attorney General to review all convictions under laws enacted during World War II to detain or restrict Japanese-Americans and to make recommendations for pardons to the President. The Justice Department simply does not have the staff to carry out this provision. Moreover, the Attorney General acts solely as a confidential advisor to the President for pardons. The Justice Department does not believe the Attorney General has the statutory authority to conduct the kind of proceedings called for in this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article by Mr. James Kilpatrick entitled "$1.2 Billion Worth of Hindsight" be included in the RECORD following my remarks. I believe Mr. Kilpatrick makes many good points why passage of this bill would not be good policy.

Mr. President, we are operating in tight fiscal times. Difficult choices must be made and priorities must be set. This body recently debated and passed a concurrent resolution on the budget. The budget bill recommends spending reductions for many worthy programs because we must bring spending under control. Yet, we are considering this legislation which is estimated to cost $1.2 billion over a 4-year period. It is inconceivable to me that the Senate would pass this costly bill when our country has a debt of over $2 trillion. This generation of taxpayers should not be held accountable for actions taken by the U.S. Government years ago.

Mr. President, the report of S. 1009 of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs states that, "The ultimate goal of this legislation is to prevent the occurrence on another similar event." The paying of restitutions and the passage of this legislation will not help prevent this action from happening again as much as will the lessons we learned from it. Executive Order 9066 was an injustice to loyal Japanese-Americans. As commendable as the objectives of this legislation are, this bill is unnecessary and too costly, and I would urge my colleagues to vote against passage.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

$1.2 BILLION WORTH OF HINDSIGHT

(By James J. Kilpatrick)

Now pending on the Senate's calendar, subject to floor debate at any time, is a bad bill that comes to us laden with good intentions. At a cost of $1.2 billion, the bill would pay $20,000 each to those surviving Americans of Japanese ancestry who were interned on the West Coast in World War II. The measure ought to be quietly retired.

It is not easy—it is probably futile—to oppose the Senate bill. It heads for the floor bearing the names of 75 sponsors. A companion measure passed the House last September by a vote of 243-141. Only a heart of stone, it is said, could fail to be moved by the injustice visited upon loyal American citizens 46 years ago. It is time to apologize, we are told; it is time to make amends.

The trouble with that compassionate plea is that it comes to us through a rear-view mirror. It embodies the hindsight wisdom of the Monday morning quarterback. The bill carries a finding that "there was no military or security reason for the internment," but that is the conclusion now. It assuredly was not the conclusion then.

Two generations have grown up since the Japanese launched their attack on Pearl Harbor. Today we count the Japanese as friends and allies. In the winter of 1941-42 they were enemies. Today it seems absurd to imagine that the Japanese might have invaded California. This seemed not at all absurd at the time. In 1988 we scarcely can imagine risks of sabotage and espionage. Reasonable men vividly perceived them then.

Acting upon these fears, Congress authorized President Roosevelt to issue what became Executive Order 9066. Pursuant to that order, the commanding general of West Coast forces proclaimed Civilian Exclusion Order No. 34. After May 9, 1942, more than 110,000 U.S. citizens of Japanese descent were to be uprooted from their homes. They were taken by train to internment camps. There they remained until the war's end in 1945. An estimated 60,000 survive.

As the Supreme Court noted in the case of Korematsu v. United States, most of the internees were loyal Americans. But some were not. More than 5,000 of them refused to swear allegiance to the United States and to renounce allegiance to the emperor. Several thousand evacuees requested repatriation to Japan. It is all very well to say today that these citizens should have received fair hearings, but in the spring of 1942 we were involved in a desperate war for national survival. Due process had to yield to the exigencies of the day.

The exclusion order came before the high court in 1944. By a vote of 6-3 the court upheld the order. Justice Hugo Black, one of the great civil libertarians of all time, wrote the opinion. Felix Frankfurter and William O. Douglas agreed. Listen to what Black said:

"We are not unmindful of the hardships imposed by the exclusion order upon a large group of American citizens. But hardships are part of war, and war is an aggregation of hardships. All citizens alike, both in and out of uniform, feel the impact of war in greater or lesser measure. . . . Compulsory exclusion of large groups of citizens from their homes, except under circumstances of direct emergency, is inconsistent with our basic governmental institutions. But when under conditions of modern warfare our shores are threatened by hostile forces, the power to protect must be commensurate with the threatened danger."

In looking back on those days, we ought to take guidance from Lord Macaulay. This was the precept of that great historian: "As we would have our descendants judge us, so we ought to judge our fathers. In order to form a correct estimate of their merits, we ought to place ourselves in their situation, to put out of our minds, for a time, all that knowledge which they could not have and we could not help having. . . . It is too much that the benefactors of mankind, after having been reviled by the dunces of their generation for going too far, should be reviled by the dunces of the next generation for not going far enough."

Rep. Bill Frenzel of Minnesota made the same point in House debate: "What a funny way to ask us to rub ashes on our heads! The bill asks us to purge ourselves of someone else's guilt with another generation's money." No penance, no payments and no apology are required. The past is past. Let it stay that way.

STATEMENT OF RICHARD K. WILLARD, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL, CIVIL DIVISION, UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

I appreciate this opportunity to present the views of the Department of Justice on S. 1009, a bill "[T]o implement the recommendations of the Commission on the Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians." For the reasons set out below, the Administration recommends against enactment of this legislation.

BACKGROUND

The wartime relocation and internment of Japanese-Americans were undertaken pursuant to decisions made at the highest level of our government during World War II as part of our nation's defense effort. These decisions were made at a time when the very survival of the Republic was threatened. With the passage of time, these decisions have been examined and questioned. In our view, the Commission's extensive effort to study the wartime relocation and internment program, despite its apparent thoroughness, proves the futility of endeavoring accurately and completely to comprehend the perception of our national leaders under the extreme wartime conditions of the period. These issues will continue to be a matter of historical and scholarly debate.

The United States government has officially recognized that much unjustified personal hardship came about as a result of the internment program. The internees were among the millions of innocent victims of World War II, confined in the wake of the unprovoked attack on Pearl Harbor and very real fear of a Japanese invasion of the West Coast. Regardless of one's opinion as to the bona fides of the government officials who approved and implemented the relocation and internment program, we all can agree that Japanese-Americans suffered much deprivation and hardship. They were expected to make personal, professional, and social sacrifices of a nature not expected of other United States citizens. As it is impossible to bring back to life the many Americans who died in the American war effort, including those heroic Americans of Japanese descent who fought in the U.S. Armed Forces, so it is impossible to restore to all those Americans the freedom that was taken as a result of war. However, previous Congresses, Presidents and the Attorney General have taken steps to acknowledge and compensate for the injuries suffered by Japanese-Americans during this period.

After the conclusion of World War II, Congress acted to authorize a program of compensation for the financial losses entailed by evacuations from the West Coast. The American-Japanese Claims Act, enacted in 1948, authorized compensation for "any claim" for damages to our loss of real or personal property as "a reasonable natural consequence of the evacuation or exclusion of" persons of Japanese ancestry as a result of governmental action during World War II. 50 U.S.C. App. § 1981-1987. This Act was amended by subsequent Congresses to liberalize its provisions for compensation. Under the Act as amended, the Justice Department received claims seeking approximately $147 million. Ultimately, 26,568 settlements were achieved, many of which settled claims presented by family groups rather than individual claimants. Thus, it is safe to conclude that of the 120,000 evacuees, most submitted claims under the American-Japanese Claims Act and received compensation. A total of over $37 million was paid in compensation pursuant to this Act.

In early 1976, President Ford formally revoked Executive Order 9066, issued by President Roosevelt in 1942 to permit exclusions from the Western Coast. Also in 1976, Congress repealed Public Law 77-503, which was enacted in 1942 to ratify Executive Order 9066. In repealing the Executive Order, President Ford stated that with the benefit of what we know now, the wartime exclusions were a mistake. Most Japanese-Americans demonstrated exceptional fidelity to our nation's ideals and loyalty to the United States despite the hardships visited upon them. There can be no doubt that Executive Order 9066 visited injustices upon loyal Americans of Japanese ancestry.

RECENT LITIGTION

This issue has been the subject of extensive litigation in recent years. In 1983, three separate coram nobis petitions were filed seeking to have wartime misdemeanor convictions set aside on the ground that the government knowingly suppressed evidence and misrepresented facts in submissions to the Supreme Court during the 1940's. In response to one of these coram nobis petitions filed by Fred Korematsu in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Attorney General Smith determined that "it is time to put behind us this controversy . . . and instead reaffirm the inherent right of each person to be treated as an individual." Accordingly, the Attorney General decided that "it is singularly appropriate to vacate [Korematsu's] conviction for nonviolent civil disobedience," as well as to do the same for other similarly situated individuals who request it. Thus, in each of these cases, the United States, while disputing petitioner's allegations, moved to vacate the conviction and dismiss the underlying indictment or information, thus moving effectively to afford petitioners the very relief they sought.

In Yasui v. United States, (D. Ore., Jan. 26, 1984), the court granted the government's motion, vacated the conviction and dismissed the petition as moot. Petitioner nonetheless appealed to the Ninth Circuit. Because of Mr. Yasui's recent death, however, the Ninth Circuit, on March 23, 1987, dismissed the appeal as moot, and the district court's decision vacating petitioner's conviction stands.

In Korematsu v. United States (N.D. Cal., April 19, 1984) the court denied the government's motion, granted the coram nobis petition, but made no findings of fact. Consequently, the United States chose not to appeal.

Finally, in Hirabayashi v. United States, (W.D. Wash., Feb. 10, 1986), the court granted the petition to set aside the conviction for failure to report for internment, but refused to set aside the conviction for violating a curfew order. Petitioner appealed from this denial of his coram nobis petition as to his curfew violation conviction and the government cross appealed from the grant of coram nobis as to the evacuation conviction. The appeals were argued on March 2, 1987, and are under submission before the Ninth Circuit.

Hohri v. United States, No. 84-5460, (D.C. Cir., Jan. 21, 1986), is a suit filed on behalf of 120,000 persons of Japanese ancestry and their heirs seeking personal injury and property loss damages claimed to arise out of the evacuation and internment program. The government has prevailed in the district court on limitations and other jurisdictional grounds. In a 2-1 decision, the court of appeals reversed and remanded for trial a portion of plaintiffs' claims.

The court of appeals affirmed dismissal of all personal injury claims and the contract and breach of fiduciary duty claims alleged in the complaint on jurisdictional grounds, but decided that plaintiffs' property damage claims under the Fifth Amendment Takings Clause could not be resolved on preliminary jurisdictional grounds and therefore reached the limitations issue. The majority opinion held that because the Supreme Court has established a presumption in favor of deferring to the military judgment on the necessity for the evacuation program, limitations did not commence to run until Congress created the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians in 1980. According to the court, the statute creating the Commission thereby "finally removed the presumption of deference to the judgment of the political branches." The court also concluded that the American-Japanese Claims Act did not provide an exclusive remedy because the Act did not provide relief that encompassed all damages required to make whole persons who suffered a "taking."

Chief Judge Markey of the Federal Circuit, sitting by designation, dissented. In his view, the appeal should have been transferred to the Federal Circuit for disposition and, in any event, the statute of limitations barred this suit.

The United States filed a petition for rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc; the suggestion was denied by a split en banc court (6-5). Thereafter, both plaintiffs and the United States filed petition for writs for certiorari with the Supreme Court.

After granting our petition and hearing oral argument, the Supreme Court, on June 1, 1987, decided, in accordance with the position we urged before the Supreme Court, that plaintiffs should have taken their appeal to the Federal Circuit rather than the D.C. Circuit. Thus, the District Court's judgment dismissing the action stands subject to plaintiffs' right to seek reversal of the judgment after their appeal is transferred to the Federal Circuit pursuant to the Supreme Court's recent decision.

S. 1009

I would like to now address some of the Department's concerns with the specific provisions of S. 1009.

FINDINGS

Section 1(a) provides congressional findings: (1) that the findings of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians accurately and completely describe the circumstances of the exclusion, relocation and internment of citizens and aliens of Japanese and Aleut ancestry; (2) that the internment of those persons of Japanese ancestry on the West Coast "was carried out without any documented acts of espionage or sabotage, or other acts of disloyalty" by them; (3 and 4) that there was no adequate military or security reason for the internment and that it was caused instead, by racial prejudice, war hysteria, and a failure of political leadership; (5) that the excluded persons of Japanese ancestry suffered enormous material, intangible, educational and job training losses; and (6) that the "basic civil liberties and constitutional rights" of those persons of Japanese ancestry were fundamentally violated by that evacuation and internment. Section 1(b) similarly states the purposes of the legislation. Section 101 apologizes on behalf of the nation for the wartime relocation and internment program.

We have reviewed the Commission's report. It does call attention to the hardships suffered by Americans of Japanese ancestry. However, it must be recognized that conclusions and subjective determinations which necessarily are an integral part of the report are subject to debate. Indeed, in June 1983, the Commission released an addendum to its report discussing a multi-volume Department of Defense publication entitled "The 'magic' Background of Pearl Harbor" because it had not discussed this important source of wartime intelligence in its report.

We question the wisdom and, indeed, the propriety, of accusing leaders of the United States government during World War II, both civilian and military, of dishonorable behavior. The wartime decisions which form the predicate for this legislation were taken against a backdrop of fears for the survival of our nation; we recently had been attacked by a totalitarian regime which had enjoyed a virtually unbroken string of military successes, both before and immediatley after it commenced war upon us. The decision made by our wartime leaders should be considered in that context.

It may be that the Commission is correct in concluding that the assumptions on which the exclusion and evacuation and detention programs were based were erroneous. It is a long unsubstantiated further step, however, to brand those actions as a product of "racial prejudice, or war hysteria, and a failure of political leadership." In most instances, the persons so accused are not alive to defend themselves today. Moreover, some of the Commission's conclusions and its selection of evidence marshaled in support of its conclusions are suspect. These matters are best left to historical and scholarly analysis rather than debated by Congress.

We do not believe that this bill should be the vehicle for promulgation of an "official" version of these historical events. The Department opposes enactment of the findings in section 1.

PARDON RECOMMENDATIONS

The Department opposes sections 202(a) and 202(b), which request the Attorney General to review certain criminal convictions with a view toward pardon and to submit pardon recommendations to the President in certain cases.

The pardon provision of the bill is completely unnecessary. As noted above, the government has offered to vacate the conviction of all Japanese-Americans who were convicted of violating wartime restrictions imposed by Executive Order 9066 and has done so in the three coram nobis proceedings filed to date. It appears that only about 39 Japanese Americans were convicted of misdemeanor violations of Executive Order 9066, many of whom may no longer be living. Vacating the convictions and dismissing the underlying indictments or informations of Japanese-Americans affords these individuals the full and meaningful relief to which a pardon would entitle them, and completely obviates the pardon review process provided in § 202.

Moreover, while we note that section 202(b) of this bill attempts to correct the constitutional flaws presented by the pardon provision of this legislation in the 99th Congress, we remain dubious of the constitutional validity of this provision when Article II, Section 2, Clause 1 of the Constitution grants virtually absolute pardon authority in the President. As we noted in our bill report on the 99th Congress, the granting of a pardon is an act of grace by the President, and the Constitution does not invest the legislature with any authority in the pardon process. The Supreme Court has confirmed that the President's authority to grant pardons may not be limited by legislative restriction. Schick v. Reed, 419 U.S. 256 (1974).

The Attorney General's advisory function (now the Associate Attorney General by assignment, 28 CFR 0.36,) in connection with the consideration of all forms of Executive clemency, including pardon, commutation (reduction) of sentence, remission of fine and reprieve, and the President's ultimate decision to grant or deny Executive clemency, is wholly discretionary. Department of Justice officials involved in discharging this function act solely as confidential advisors to the President in the exercise of the pardon power, and not in fulfillment of any statutory mandate to conduct the kind of proceedings contemplated in Section 202.

Additionally, the language of § 202 is ambiguous in at least two respects. Section 202(a) directs the review of "all cases in which United States citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry were convicted of violations of laws of the United States," including convictions for violations of military directives respecting the exclusion, relocation or detention of individuals solely on the basis of Japanese ancestry. First, the class of individuals whose cases are to be reviewed is vaguely defined. The present wording of Section 202(a) could be interpreted to request the review of not only the cases of those living but also the cases of those who are deceased. It has been a long established practice not to grant posthumous pardons. The legal basis of the practice is in large part the concept that a pardon, like a deed, must be accepted by the person to whom it is directed. Acceptance, of course, is impossible when the recipient is deceased. See, United States v. Wilson, 7 Pet. 160 (1833); Burdick v. United States, 236 U.S. 79 (1915); Meldrim v. United States, 7 Ct. Cl. 595 (1871); Sierra v. United States, 9 Ct. Cl. 224 (1873); 11 Op. A.G. 35 (1864).

Second, provision for the review of "all cases" involving violations of "any laws of the United States, including convictions for violations of military orders," is too broad. This language may be interpreted to require the review of both felony and misdemeanor offenses, as well as require the review of any crime committed during the evacuation, relocation and internment period, such as murder, extortion, kidnapping, theft, counterfeiting and other offenses which may have been committed on a government reservation by members of the class.

AGENCY REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS

Section 203 would require agencies to review with liberality applications for restitution of positions, status or entitlements, giving full consideration "to the historical findings" of the Commission and the findings in the Act. We see no need for this provision, are uncertain as to how it could fairly be applied in practice at this late date, and suggest that it could lead to extreme difficulties in administration with resultant litigation.

THE RESTITUTION FUND

Section 204 would establish a Civil Liberties Public Education Fund in the amount of $1.3 billion to be available for disbursement pursuant to sections 205 and 206.

Section 205 provides for the tax free award of $20,000 to every living person of Japanese ancestry who was deprived of liberty or property as the result of the wartime programs. Nonresidents apparently would be entitled to the benefits of this section. Since, according to the recommendations of the Commission, approximately 60,000 persons would benefit from those awards, about $1.2 billion would be expended on this program.

Section 206 would establish a Board of Directors of the fund provided for in section 205. The board would disburse the remaining $100 million or more of the Fund for the purposes enumerated in subsection (b) of section 206, including projects "for the general welfare of the ethnic Japanese community in the United States."

The Department opposes these provisions for paying additional reparations to individuals where Congress has already enacted a comprehensive statutory scheme which provided a reasonable and balanced contemporaneous remedy to affected individuals. By enacting the 1948 American-Japanese Claims Act, Congress recognized long ago that many loyal Americans of Japanese descent were injured by the wartime relocation and internment program. Although the Commission's report challenges the amount of compensation chosen by Congress as inadequate, Congress has spoken after considerable debate, and there is no good reason to question that settlement now three-and-one-half decades later.

The American-Japanese Claims Act did not include every item of damages that was or could have been suggested. It did, however, address the hardships visited upon persons of Japanese ancestry in a comprehensive, considered manner, taking into account individual needs and losses. This effort to correct injustice to individuals was in keeping with our nation's best tradition of individual rather than collective response and was more contemporaneous with the injuries to the claimants than would be any payments at this late date.

Moreover, in 1956, Congress considered legislation that directly called into question the adequacy of the claims settlements provided in the 1948 Act. The bill as introduced would have liberalized the relief provisions of the Act by granting expanded compensation for certain losses. Congress rejected this proposal because it "would substantially reopen the entire project." H.R. Rep. 1809, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., 9 (1956). Thus, with the hardships and deprivations of the internees still relatively contemporaneous, a later Congress adjudged the American-Japanese Claims Act to be fundamentally sound. Nothing has occurred since Congress last considered the matter to warrant a supplemental payment to internees. The results of the settlement process under the Act, long since completed, deserve to be accepted as a fair resolution of the claims involved.

The bill's restitution provisions would also impose heavy administrative burdens on the Attorney General. The bill would confer on the Attorney General responsibility for investigating, finding and paying eligible recipients under severe time constraints. The Attorney General is specifically prohibited even from requiring eligible persons to make application for these payments. This duty could require the Department to commit a considerable amount of manpower and resources to the search for eligible recipients. Yet, the bill would provide no funding for the location or identification of eligible recipients and would expressly prohibit the Attorney General from recovering expenses incurred in carrying out this responsibility from the Trust Fund set up to pay eligible recipients.

We also oppose the concept of a special fund incorporated in section 206. As noted earlier, we do not believe it is the proper function of our government to adopt an "official" version of these historical events. Similarly, we oppose spending one hundred million dollars to "educate" the American people to accept this official interpretation of our history.

DEFINITION OF ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS

We also oppose the breadth of the definitions of eligible individuals set forth at section 201 of the bill.

First, the term "living" is imprecise. It is unclear whether the term is intended to refer to the time of the enactment of the legislation, the time when application for the benefit is made, or to the time when payment of a benefit is made.

Second, the definition would cover "any living individual" who had been subject to the exclusion, relocation, or detention, without any express exclusion of persons residing outside the United States. See, § 201(1). The all inclusiveness of the term "eligible individual" overlooks the important factor that at lest several hundred of the detainees were fanatical pro-Japanese, had terrorized their fellow detainees loyal to the United States, and voluntarily sought repatriation to Japan after the end of the war. See, Acheson v. Murakami, 176 F. 2d 953, 958 (9th Cir. 1949); McGrath v. Abo, 186 F. 2d 766, 771-72 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 342 U.S. 832 (1951); and in particular Findings of the Fact 18, 20, 22, 25, 27, 29, 35, 39, 40, 45, 46 of the United States District Court for the Southern District of California in Murakami v. Acheson, attached to and made part of the court of appeals' decision in that case. It would be unfair to the United States and to the loyal persons of Japanese descent if the benefits of this legislation were made available to persons who were disloyal to the United States.

TITLE III OF S. 1009

The Department is also opposed to Title III of S. 1009, entitled "Aleutian and Pribilof Islands Restitution." In this connection the Commission observed that "[t]he Aleut evacuation and the removal of persons of Japanese ancestry from the West Coast during the same period were separate events—neither caused nor influenced the other . . . The evacuation of the Aleuts was a reasonable precaution taken to ensure their safety." Personal Justice Denied, at 318. The focus of the Commission's report was upon its conclusion that "the evacuation of the Aleuts was not planned in a timely or thoughtful manner," leading to hardships upon the persons exposed to the conditions flowing from their evacuation from the war zone.

We analyze below the specific provisions which S. 1009 would enact to benefit Aleuts. Fundamentally, however, we do not believe that wartime hardships of property removed from a war zone provide any factual predicate for consideration of especial, favorable treatment for this group as opposed to other individuals whose lives were disrupted and who suffered hardship or death during World War II. Many activities undertaken by our government during World War II could be criticized, with hindsight, as untimely or poorly planned. We do not believe that such criticism can appropriately form the basis for special compensation.

Turning to the specific provisions of Title III of the bill, we have these comments.

THE ADMINISTRATOR AS AN OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES

Section 305 would provide for an "Administrator" (defined in section 302(1)) who would administer certain expenditures made by the Secretary of the Treasury from the Aleutian and Pribilof Islands Restitution Fund established by section 303. Section 305(a) would designate as "Administrator" the "Association," defined in section 302(4) as "the Aleutian/Pribilof Islands Association, a non-profit regional corporation established for the benefit of the Aleut people and organized under the laws of the State of Alaska." (We do not know whether the Aleutian/Pribilof Islands Association would have to be incorporated, or whether it is already in existence; we are likewise not informed whether it is or would be a non-for-profit regional organization under the laws of Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act of 1971, 85 Stat. 691, as amended, 43 U.S.C. § 1606(d).)

The designation in a statute of a person or corporation to perform statutory functions necessarily raises the question whether the designee is charged with functions which may be performed only by an officer of the United States. If that is the case, the person or the governing body of the corporation must be appointed in the manner provided for in the Appointments Clause of the Constitution, i.e., by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or, where authorized, by heads of departments. Art. II, § 2, cl. 2. Congress cannot appoint officers of the United States.

Whether a person is an officer of the United States in a constitutional sense depends upon his statutory duties. A person who performs merely advisory functions, and who possesses no enforcement authority or power to bind the government, is generally not considered to be an officer within the meaning of the constitutional provisions cited above. 24 Op. A.G. 12 (1902); 26 Op. A.G. 247 (1907); H.R. Rep. No. 2205, 55th Cong. 3d Sess. 48-54 (1899). However, a person who performs significant governmental duties pursuant to the laws of the United States is an officer in the constitutional sense, and therefore must be appointed pursuant to Article II, § 2, cl. 2 of the Constitution. Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 126, 141 (1976).

We have examined the statutory duties of the Administrator under section 306 of the bill in order to determine whether his functions will be merely advisory or whether the Administrator will be involved in the actual administration of the Act. According to § 306(a), the Administrator would make restitution as provided in that section for certain Aleutian losses sustained in World War II, and take such other action as required by Title III of the bill. These duties would benefit the establishment of a trust of $5 million for the benefit of the affected Aleutian communities and the appointment of not more than seven trustees to maintain and operate that trust (§ 306(b)(1)); the regulation of the manner in which the trust to be administered (§ 306(b)(3)); the rebuilding, restoration, or replacement of damaged or destroyed churches and church property (§ 306(c)); and assistance to the Secretary of the Treasury in identifying and locating Aleuts entitled to receive payments under § 307 (§ 307(a)(3)). The Administrator, thus, would not be a mere conduit of funds but would be charged with the performance of a significant amount of administrative responsibilities under a federal statute. The Constitution therefore requires either that the Administrator be appointed in accordance with Article II, § 2, cl. 2, or that the bill be amended so as to relieve the position of any duties directly imposed upon by a federal statute.

RESTORATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY

Section 306(c), dealing with the restoration of church property, also raises some constitutional concern. This subsection would authorize the Administrator "to rebuild, restore or replace churches and church property damaged or destroyed in affected Aleut villages during World War II." The Administrator would receive $100,000 from the Secretary of the Treasury to make an inventory and assessment of all churches and church property damaged or destroyed in the affected Aleut villages during World War II. Within one year after the enactment of this legislation the Administrator would be required to submit the inventory and assessment "together with specific recommendations and detailed plans for reconstruction, restoration and replacement work to be performed" to a review panel comprised of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, the Chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, and the Administrator of GSA. If the Administrator's plans and recommendations are not disapproved by the review panel within sixty days, the Administrator would implement them as soon as possible. If the differences between the Administrator and the review panel should be irreconcilable, the Secretary of the Treasury would submit the matter to Congress for approval or disapproval by joint resolution. Section 306(c)(4) would authorize the appropriation of $1,399,000 to carry out the purposes of the church restoration program.

Under this approach, the compensation for the destroyed or damaged churches would not be turned over directly to the affected Aleut villages, but to the Administrator. The Administrator would be charged with the statutory duties of making an inventory and assessment "together with specific recommendations and detailed plans for reconstruction, restoration and replacement work to be performed"; of submitting the inventory, assessment, and recommendation to a review panel consisting of three federal officers; and of trying to reconcile any differences between himself and the review panel, irreconcilable differences between the Administrator and the review panel to be resolved by Congress. The effect of this procedure would be that the details of restoring or rebuilding the churches would be determined by the Administrator (who, as the result of his statutory functions would have to be an officer of the United States), and reviewed by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, the Chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, the Administrator of GSA, and possibly Congress. This government involvement in the manner in which the funds allocated for church repair or reconstruction are to be spent would raise First Amendment concerns. Meek v. Pittenger, 421 U.S. 349, 370 (1975); Committee for Public Education v. Regan, 444 U.S. 646, 659-60 (1980).

I understand the Department of the Interior has additional concerns regarding Title III.

For all the foregoing reasons, the Department of Justice would recommend that the President veto S. 1009.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I believe this country owes an apology to many loyal Americans of Japanese descent who were wrongly incarcerated during the Second World War. But, Mr. President, I am very much opposed to attaching price tags to personal freedoms in an attempt to atone ourselves for the internment of the Japanese-Americans.

Have we reached the point where an apology—even the formal apology of a nation—does not mean anything without monetary proof of our sincerity? I don't think $1.2 billion of contrition means we are any sorrier than an earnest, formal apology. In fact, placing a price of $20,000 per person on our democratic rights trivializes the 200 some years we have spent trying to protect them. Can we estimate the worth of the many Americans that have died to protect our rights?

What is the formula for deciding how much a government must pay citizens whose constitutional rights have been curtailed or otherwise denied, regardless of their race? Is the folly behind this price-fixing not apparent? Soon our courts could be littered with $20,000 claims based on loss of liberty. The attorneys of this body can testify to the dangerousness of the precedent this bill would set.

Mr. President, I hope this body will see fit to extend an entire nation's apology to the victims of the internment hysteria, without trying to affix a price to the personal freedoms and liberties that this country was founded upon.

Mr. President, for these reasons I must vote against this bill.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to make some brief comments about the wartime reparations legislation now before us.

I feel that the civil liberties of the Japanese-Americans detained in camps on the west coast during World War II were violated. Without doubt, the presence of the camps on American soil is a dark chapter in our history. The Senator from Hawaii, Mr. MATSUNAGA, has made this case eloquently. His accounts of the shame and suffering of interned Japanese-Americans are profoundly moving.

At the very time patriotism of Japanese-Americans was being called into question, thousands of their young sons were carrying the American flag into battle. Both Senators from Hawaii—Mr. INOUYE and Mr. MATSUNAGA—volunteered for the military and offered distinguished service to our country.

We must not forget the past but, instead, learn from the mistakes of those who preceded us. A formal apology to those U.S. citizens detained in the wartime internment camps is long overdue and most certainly in order. This is a feature of the measure before us that I wholeheartedly endorse.

I have long been concerned, however, about the provisions in the legislation providing a tax-free payment of $20,000 to each detainee. The total cost of these payments will exceed $1.2 billion, which is a lot of money. It is a particularly large sum, considering this is a time when we are forced to cut corners on any number of priority programs due to huge budget deficits.

Although the sheer amount of money involved is of concern, an even more troubling question is whether an arbitrary monetary payment is necessary to ensure the sincerity of a formal apology for actions occurring 45 years ago. After so many years, monetary reparations can't do much to correct past losses. Certainly, the wartime internment of Japanese-Americans was a mistake. Unfortunately, it is not the only mistake we as a nation have made. Our treatment of American Indians, our acceptance of slavery, and our insensitivity to the rights of many minority groups are terrible moral failings. I just do not believe that money can buy atonement.

It is for these reasons that I strongly supported the efforts of Senator HECHT to remove the compensation provisions from the bill. I am disappointed that the majority of my colleagues did not support his amendment. Enactment of this amendment would have given us a bill which offers a strong and heartfelt apology to those Japanese-Americans who were detained without due process. That is the real heart of the matter.

So, it is with mixed emotions that I will cast my vote in favor of final passage of this legislation. On balance, my belief that we should apologize for the suffering we have caused to many patriotic Americans outweighs my concern that no amount of money can offer any true redress. The overwhelming majority of my colleagues in the House and in the Senate have made it clear that this legislation is the only means available to put behind us this sad chapter of our history.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today the Senate is afforded the opportunity to correct a shameful episodes in our Nation's history. Over 45 years ago, in the name of wartime security, the United States Government summarily denied some 120,000 American citizens and resident aliens of Japanese ancestry the rights promised under our Constitution. These Japanese-Americans were taken from their homes, were forced to abandon their businesses and professions, and were relocated to crowded interment camps with often deplorable conditions.

Congress has been aware for some time of the failings of our Government during this time period. In 1980, we established the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians to examine the facts surrounding the relocation of these Japanese-Americans. The Commission found that there was no "military necessity" for the actions taken against these people. In addition, according to the Commission, "not a single documented act of espionage, sabotage, or fifth column activity was committed by an American citizen of Japanese ancestry or by a resident Japanese alien on the west coast" during this period. This fact not only dramatizes the lack of any justification for our Government's actions, but also is an impressive tribute to the loyalty of Japanese-American citizens toward the United States.

The legislation before the Senate now would implement the recommendations of the Commission. This bill would acknowledge the fundamental injustice of, and apologize on behalf of the people of the United States for, the evacuation, relocation, and internment of United States citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry. This bill would also provide some restitution to each surviving Japanese-American who was interned. The bill also addresses the harsh manner in which the relocation of the Aleut civilian residents of the Pribilof Islands and the Aleutian Islands was conducted.

It is certainly true that we are blessed with 20-20 hindsight on this matter. I am sure it was often difficult during World War II to separate legitimate national security concerns from specious ones. Nevertheless, hindsight enables us to review—without the cloud of wartime fear—our Government's actions and come to the clear and unmistakable conclusion that we were quite simply wrong. And having recognized this wrong, this Government can act to try to provide some remedy for this tragedy.

I am hopeful we can lift this particular cloud from our Nation's conscience, and I also hope it will do more than that. It should also serve as a reminder to this proud Nation that we should always have the strength to resist the racial hysteria and prejudice that plagued us during these particular years of World War II and caused us to strip so many American citizens of their constitutional rights.

Finally, I would like to express my congratulations to my good friend, Senator MATSUNAGA, and to the other Members of the Senate and the House who have been active in successfully navigating this bill through the legislative waters. Only, their persistence and hard work have made this day possible.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, in this country we have a statute of limitations for virtually every crime except murder. We have a statute of limitations for virtually every tort action. Why? Not because we do not think that a wrong was created, not that we do not think that someone was harmed, but because we believe there is a concern for finality, that at some point in time we cannot say to one generation, go back and try to make monetary amends for the previous generation. We do that consistently in our law on the criminal side as well as on the civil side.

Mr. President, establishment of the Japanese-American Claims Act was not the last of the Federal Government's efforts regarding the relocation of Japanese-Americans. In 1975, Congress repealed Public Law 77-503, which was enacted in 1942 to ratify Executive Order 9066.

In early 1976, President Ford formally revoked Executive Order 9066. In repealing the Executive order, President Ford stated that with the benefit of what we know now, the wartime exclusions were a mistake. Most Japanese-Americans demonstrated exceptional fidelity to our Nation's ideals and loyalty to the United States despite the hardships visited upon them. There can be no doubt that Executive Order 9066 visited injustice upon loyal Americans of Japanese ancestry.

In 1980, the Congress established the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians to review the events surrounding and leading up to the issuance of Executive Order 9066. In 1982, the Commission released its report, titled "Personal Justice Denied."

It was clear in creating the Commission that there was no understanding that the main or chief purpose was to provide monetary redress. In fact, many of the proponents of the legislation which gave rise to the Commission went to great lengths to assure us that this was not the case.

Congressman DANIEL LUNGREN, the only Member of Congress who sat on the Commission, stated during debate on H.R. 442 in the House that,

> Prime sponsors of the legislation in the Senate to establish the Commission said they would not support the establishment of the Commission if monetary reparations were the outcome of that legislation.

Certainly this body has a right to make an independent judgment on this matter. But in my estimation it is an expensive distraction from the seriousness of this episode in our Nation's history.

The Commission's extensive efforts to study the wartime relocation and internment program, despite its apparent thoroughness, proves the futility of endeavoring accurately and completely to comprehend the perception of our national leaders under the extreme wartime conditions of the period.

As Congressman LUNGREN pointed out,

> "[o]ne of the things I think we have to recognize is that we are judging a previous generation with the ability of 20-20 hindsight. I think the one major shortcoming of the Commission was that we ignored what was known as the MAGIC cables. Those were the coded cables of the Japanese Government during World War II, which they continued to send not knowing that we had broken their code. The information that was made available to Franklin Delano Roosevelt at the time he made this decision gave quite a different view of things than what we found subsequently.

Mr. President, Dr. Ken Masugi is a Japanese-American with a Ph.D. in political science. He currently writes and teaches in the D.C. area. His parents were relocated during the war; yet, like Senator Hayakawa, Dr. Masugi opposes the provisions to pay reparations. He has written extensively about the relocation, the Commission, and this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that an article by Dr. Masugi be printed in the RECORD. In this article, titled "For Japanese-Americans, Cash Can't Bring Honor," Dr. Masugi also questions the accuracy and objectivity of the results of the Commission.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOR JAPANESE-AMERICANS, CASH CAN'T BRING HONOR

(By Ken Masugi)

"As we look back, we seem to have lost everything dear in our life. Our family life was disrupted; our business and our professions were gone; our savings and securities were lost; our rights and privileges were denied. . . . We wonder if any other group would have taken such a beating as gracefully as we did—with little complaints and without deviating from loyalty to our country."

One might think these reflections come from "Personal Justice Denied," the recent report of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians that reexamined the internment of Japanese-Americans in World War II. In fact, they are from the forward to the 1943 yearbook of the Hunt (Ida.) Relocation Center.

Although the 467-page report of the commission cost $1.3 million to prepare, its findings are scarcely anything new. Moreover, press stories and commentaries about it actually increase misunderstanding about that sad episode by failing to mention the 1948 Evacuation Claims Act (which allowed some compensation for private-property losses caused by internment) and the fact that internees could leave the centers if they had employment or a place in college.

These misunderstandings follow from the commission's fundamental failure. Proceeding with the confidence of hindsight, it downplays the harsh fact that, just as Lincoln took despotic actions in the war that put an end to slavery, so arbitrary and unfair acts necessarily accompanied U.S. policies in the world war to save America from Japanese and German imperialism. While it would be preposterous to assert that everything that a nation does in wartime is justified, it would be equally unreasonable to accept at face value criticism of 40-year-old American wartime policy.

One massive error is the report's failure to take proper account of the pressures of war. Thus, it does not fully consider the nation's circumstances on the afternoon of Dec. 7, 1941. To its credit, the commission does note the widespread acceptance of racial segregation in government and civil life. Also it suggests a comparison between the situation of Japanese-Americans and other ethnic groups with ties to their lands of origin.

However, the wartime hatred and fear of ethnic Japanese cannot be ascribed to racism alone; shared nationality with a brutal enemy was a crucial element. To demand that a nation question its natural responses when attacked is to question whether survival itself is good.

In time of war reasonable men expect that the normal procedure of justice are subject to violent alteration. Hence, the report's title is remarkably inapt. I reflect on my immigrant uncle who returned to Japan before the Pearl Harbor attack: He feared the worst in a coming war. Even many Japanese-Americans accepted the need for their removal.

The report's great virtue is that it enables a reader to see how evacuation and internment policies could easily be modified to the internee's advantage. It also notes that the extraordinary measures were taken with misgivings and hesitation at the higher levels of the federal government.

Perhaps the crucial turn of events in the development of an internment policy was the vociferous objection of inland Western state officials to the admission of Japanese-Americans who were to relocate "voluntarily" for temporary resettlement. A series of bad decisions had to be made for the incarceration of 120,000 persons who had committed no crime. But it is a travesty of history to maintain that racist war profiteers created the myth of treacherous Japanese-Americans in order to appropriate their lands and goods and dupe the government into establishing "concentration camps."

The commission's report closes thus: "('Camp') is the mournful reference point from which (Japanese-Americans) describe changes in their communities, their personal lives, their aspirations. It is the central experience which has shaped the way they see themselves, how they see America, and how they have raised their children."

There is much truth to this, but it must come with a deeper understanding of the Japanese-American condition. Any American's understanding of his ethnic roots should make him marvel at the ideals of equality and liberty that enables descendants of any nation to become Americans. Alas, the report will not do this by itself. Some passages lapse into social-science gibberish, such as a ham-handed attempt to interpret Japanese-American characteristics (for example, the desire to obtain a good education) as "scars of wartime incarceration." Worst of all, it sets the stage for the misguided notion that latter-day payoffs—euphemistically known as "redress"—can somehow assuage the proper indignation at having patriotism questioned and losing liberty and property.

The honor that some seek cannot be obtained through lawsuits, but it can surely be lost by pursuing it as though it could be. The true lessons of the internment have yet to be fully articulated.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President let me read from a letter from the Honorable John J. McCloy, former Assistant Secretary of War:

I was in the War Department on the "Day of Infamy" on December 7, 1941 and I believe I was the highest senior civilian official there at the time of the attack. I have testified before the commission which was appointed by President Carter to look into the circumstances surrounding the steps which were taken by our government following the attack to offset the consequences of the loss of almost our entire Pacific Battle Fleet and its installations on that day.

Only as this commission was about to close its hearings, was I called upon to appear before it in regard to the relocation program which had been ordered by President Roosevelt. By that time, a great head of steam had been built up by news accounts of the hearings largely inspired by the lobbyists. From my personal experience, at the hearings of the commission, I believe its conduct was an horrendous affront to our tradition for fair and objective hearings. It constituted a serious affront to that tradition. Whenever I sought in the slightest degree to justify the action of the United States which was ordered by President Roosevelt, my testimony was met with hisses and boos such as I have never, over an experience extending back to World War I, been heretofore subjected to. Others had similar experiences. I do not have the means or the resources to call witnesses or produce evidence in support of the action taken by the President of the United States and his advisors but I was there at the time and it became clear from the outset of my testimony that the commission was not at all disposed to conduct an objective investigation of the circumstances which induced the President of the United States to issue the order which he did and as to the significance and purpose of which he was fully aware. The commission was, in effect, one erected to build up a case against the propriety of such an order and the manner in which it had been carried out. No current officials of the government, so far as I have heard, were ever called on to produce evidence in support of the action which the President and his advisors took in their good judgment as to what the consequences of the attack demanded.

Mr. President, these issues will and should continue to be a matter of historical and scholarly debate. It is totally inappropriate for the Government to adopt an "official" version of these historical events. It is even more appalling that Congress would spend $100 million to "educate" the American people to accept an official interpretation of history.

Mr. President, the Japanese-Americans who were relocated have, and are continuing to pursue redress in the courts. In 1983, three petitions were filed seeking to have wartime misdemeanor convictions set aside on the ground that the Government knowingly suppressed evidence and misrepresented facts in submissions to the Supreme Court during the 1940's. In response to the petition, Attorney General William French Smith stated that:

> It is time to put behind us this controversy * * * and instead reaffirm the inherent right of each person to be treated as an individual.

The Attorney General decided that "it is singularly appropriate to vacate [Korematsu's] conviction for nonviolent civil disobedience," as well as to do the same for other similarly situated individuals who request it. Thus, in each case, the United States moved to vacate the conviction and dismiss the underlying indictment, thus affording to the petitioners the relief they sought.

Mr. President, Gordon Kyoshi Hirabayashi was one of three U.S. residents to be prosecuted for refusing to be relocated. He spent 2 years in jail. In February 1986, a Federal district court judge overturned his conviction. According to an article that appeared in the Washington Post, Mr. Hirabayashi stated that:

> The decision vindicates the American system of government. * * * I think it's really a great victory, not only for me personally but for all Japanese-Americans, and finally for America and our system of justice. It shows people can make the system work for them, even if it takes 40 years.

Mr. President, Japanese-American internees and their heirs are currently pursuing their relief in court. The case of Hohri versus United States was filed on behalf of the 120,000 persons of Japanese ancestry and their heirs seeking personal injury and property loss damages arising out of the relocation and internment program. The case has reached the Supreme Court once on jurisdictional issues and has been remanded to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

Mr. President, the point is that—as the case of Mr. Hirabayashi illustrates—the judicial system works, and we should allow it to work. If injuries are sustained as a result of a violation of constitutional rights, the courts are the appropriate arena for redressing those injuries. This bill attempts to intrude on the jurisdiction of the judiciary branch by awarding $20,000 to each Japanese-American who was interned or relocated.

It is not the proper role of Congress to attempt to adjudicate the private claims for a specific class of citizens for what, in retrospect, we may consider constitutional violations. But even if you do think it is the appropriate function of Congress to attempt to settle judicial claims in this manner, it is inappropriate to do so before the courts have had an opportunity to decide the issue.

Mr. President, I must also question the wisdom and the propriety of accusing leaders of the U.S. Government during World War II, both civilian and military, of dishonorable behavior, especially when they are not around to defend their decisions. The relocation decision was one made by President Roosevelt with the advice of his counselors and based on the various pieces of information he had before him. Let me read a few of the previously mentioned MAGIC cables that were before the President. One cable from the Seattle Japanese Consulate to Tokyo stated:

> We are using foreign company employees as well as employees in our own companies here for the collection of intelligence having to do with economics along the lines of the construction of ships, the number of airplanes produced and the various types, the production of copper, zinc and aluminum, the yield of tin for cans and lumber. For the future we have made arrangements to collect intelligence from second generation Japanese draftees on matters dealing with troops as well as troop speech and behavior.

Another cable, from the Los Angeles Council to the Government of Japan in Tokyo: "We are doing everything in our power to establish inside contact in connection with our efforts to gather intelligence materials." Further on it continues, "We plan to establish very close relationships with various organizations and in strict secrecy have them keep these military establishments under close surveillance. Through these means we hope to obtain accurate and detailed intelligence reports. We have already established contact with absolutely reliable Japanese in the San Pedro and San Diego area," both of those areas in southern California along the coast, "who will keep a close watch on all shipments of airplanes and on other war materials and report the amounts and destinations of such shipments. The same steps have been taken with regard to traffic across the United States-Mexico border. We shall maintain connection with our second generation who at present are in the U.S. Army, to keep us informed of various developments in the Army. We also have connections with our second generation working in airplane plants for intelligence purposes. With regard to the Navy we are cooperating with our naval attache's office and submitting reports as accurately and as speedily as possible." Then there are a number of other cables in the same regard.

Mr. President, I also want to dispel some of the misconceptions that have been fostered about the conditions that existed in the relocation centers. The governing body of the relocation centers, the War Relocation Authority, was headed by Mr. Dillon Myer. I quote again from the Honorable Senator Hayakawa:

> Mr. Myer did everything possible to make life tolerable for the internees. He encouraged camp self-government, hired teachers from outside to continue the education of the children, sent WRA staff around the East and Middle West to seek college admittance for Nisei who had graduated from the camp high schools. One result was that many Nisei students who, without enforced evacuation from the west coast, might have stopped with a high school education to work in their father's shops or farms, instead went on to college, including prestigious and private institutions such as Antioch, Oberlin, and Mount Holyoke, as well as to such great public institutions as Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Purdue.
> A large number of young people—middle-aged people by this time—from very modest families got a college education which they otherwise would never have if they had not been sent to relocation camp.
> The officials of the staff of the WRA with a few exceptions were deeply concerned about the injustice of the relocation program, eager to restore the Japanese Americans, especially Nisei, to normal American lives. They fanned out over the United States east of the Rockies to seek employment for them. You must understand that the Japanese Americans that were put into camps were only those who lived west of the Rockies. If you lived east of the Rockies—Salt Lake City, Denver, Chicago—they left you alone, because you were not considered to be a military danger. I was living in Chicago thank goodness.
> Everywhere the Japanese Americans went, they impressed their employers by their industry and loyalty, so that more were summoned from the camps—scientists, teachers, mechanics, food processors, agricultural workers. By the time the order excluding Japanese from the west coast was rescinded on January 2, 1945, half the internees had found new jobs and homes in mid-America and the East.
> I emphasize this last point because the relocation centers were not "concentration camps." The younger generation of Japanese Americans love to call them concentration camps. Unlike the Nazis, who made the term "concentration camp" a symbol of the ultimate in man's inhumanity to man, the WRA officials worked hard to release their internees not to be sent to gas chambers but to freedom, to useful jobs on the outside world and to get their B.A. at Oberlin College.
> I point out these facts to emphasize the point that to call relocation centers concentration camps, as is all too commonly done, is semantic inflation of the most dishonest kind, an attempt to equate the actions of the U.S. Government with the genocidal actions of the Nazis against the Jews during the Hitler regime. As an American I protest this calamity against the Nation I am proud to have served as an educator and even prouder to serve as a legislator.
> Now, the relocation center at Tule Lake, Calif., was different from the others. It was there that those who resisted the evacuation and internment, including a Japanese veteran of the U.S. Army in World War I, a Nisei who renounced American citizenship in protest against the relocation, and other angry people were sent to isolate them from those who patiently accepted their internment. There were frequent disturbances at Tule Lake.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be included in the RECORD at this point a copy of the testimony that Mr. Myer gave before the Commission in 1981.

There being no objection, the testimony was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TESTIMONY OF DILLON S. MYER

My name is Dillon S. Myer, and I was appointed by President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, June 1942, to head the War Relocation Authority, which had been established under Executive Order 9102, March 18th, 1942.

Executive Order 9102 was a completely separate and distinct order under the Presidential wartime powers, and was a civilian agency. Unlike Executive Order 9066, February 19th, 1942, which gave the Western Command extraordinary powers to wage war successfully by specifying that "any and all persons" may be removed from military designated areas, Executive Order 9102 established an agency of the government responsible for establishing centers into which persons of Japanese ancestry could reside or relocate away from the red zones of the military designated areas on the west coast.

The first director of the War Relocation Authority, Milton Eisenhower, consulted with me regarding the name of the centers, and it was agreed that the best name was "relocation centers", in view of their function.

The function of the War Relocation Authority was one of arranging relocation into normal communities for all evacuees in our centers. These communities were located throughout the United States away from the sensitive west coast.

To carry out the business of the War Relocation Authority, we established regional relocation offices for the purpose of finding employment for the evacuees, to help educate the public as to their status, and to urge evacuees to move out of the centers.

We took very seriously our responsibility to get as many evacuees out of the centers into other communities, and several thousand did. There were still several thousand in the relocation centers at the end of World War II. Many of these were Issei, who were fearful of public reactions because they were Japanese nationals.

We in the War Relocation Authority tried to do the most constructive job possible in the placement of evacuees into communities and to provide temporary living conditions for those who chose to remain at the centers.

Because of my nearly three decades of progressive activity in the agricultural field, I was considered ably qualified for the arduous and trying times in administering the relocation centers which in many instances would have had to be self-productive with regard to feeding such vast populations which were so dependent on our government for even the most basic needs.

These needs were furnished by way of medical/dental care, housing, food, clothing, recreational diversion, and foremost the proper educational facilities for the thousands of young Americans of Japanese ancestry who naturally were brought with the adults, who made the final decision to either relocate to the interior, or use the relocation centers as wayside shelters for several months, or who chose to remain for the duration.

One fourth of all American-born of Japanese ancestry in the War Relocation Centers were only 15 years of age, and many more were much younger. In keeping with the Japanese tradition, the War Relocation Authority worked very hard to keep families together. In many instances, Americans of Japanese ancestry left families to continue their education in colleges and universities, and many other patriotic Americans participated in the war effort by fighting for their country.

Those who did this left older brothers and grandparents or younger brothers and sisters at the relocation centers, fully confident that I and my staff would see to their needs.

I have been greatly concerned about the misuse of terms and misstatements by some regarding the real objectives of the War Relocation Authority and the relocation centers. There has been a practice in some areas to refer to the relocation centers as "concentration camps", even though the United States Supreme Court spelled out the difference between concentration camps and relocation centers in the October 1944 term, landmark decision, Fred Korematsu v. United States, in which our highest tribunal stated, "we deem it unjustifiable to call them concentration camps with all the ugly connotations that term implies."

As early as August 29th, 1973, I heard about the use of this offensive terminology and thought it was popular just among some of the younger Japanese Americans to use this terminology, probably due in part to the fact that two different books have been published with the same title, Concentration Camps, USA.

I found it useless to protest at the time and believed that any public protest from me would only set the argument more deeply. I felt the people who were using the term loved controversy, and anything I said in public would only add to the fire of controversy.

As you might expect, I did not and do not like the idea of the term "concentration camps" instead of relocation centers for the reasons set forth in my book, Uprooted Americans. I especially do not like the adopted term, because I do not want to go down in history as a director of "concentration camps". It's offensive to me and to those dedicated members of my staff.

When the War Relocation Authority was preparing to close the final chapter in this most misunderstood period of American history, the Japanese American Citizens League, representing their members and the vast majority of all persons of Japanese ancestry in the United States, held a testimonial banquet May 22nd, 1946, at the Roosevelt Hotel in New York City.

At this testimonial banquet, I was presented with a citation and many testimonials which, I was told, represented the affection and esteem in which I and members of my staff were held by the evacuees whose lives and ours were so intermingled, dependent one upon another during this great wartime tragedy.

But as the Supreme Court stated, and I must confirm that war brings tragedy to all, that "Citizenship carries its responsibilities as well as its privileges, and in time of war the burden is always heavier."

More than 20 years later, another tribute was given me by these same evacuees lauding the WRA, the War Relocation Authority as "a living tribute to the correctness and vision of war relocation policies and practices".

Leading these tributes was Washington representative of the Japanese American Citizens League, Mr. Mike M. Masaoka, who today has joined with those who have demeaned me and my staff of dedicated individuals, most of whom are no longer here to defend themselves and their honorable wartime actions.

When I learned the names of those who are now using the term "concentration camp" and are asking for redress and reparations, I was moved to tears and could not help recalling that it was these very men who had kissed my hand in gratitude.

Mr. Masaoka wrote a complementary Foreword to my book UPROOTED AMERICANS, and in it he stated that he was one who "has probably lived closer to the experience of those of Japanese ancestry in the United States from just before December 7th, 1941, than almost anyone else, first as the National Secretary of the Japanese American Citizens League on the west coast prior to and during the evacuation", and that he had personal knowledge of what Dillion S. Myer "has meant and means to those of Japanese ancestry in the United States".

Why has this man and those who paid tribute now forsaken me and my country? Why do they dishonor both?

Some who were not even born or were too young to remember, have told stories such as "a child being shot by a sentry". My memory is not so good anymore, but this is not the kind of incident that I would forget. Another criticism aimed at me is my advancing age and state of health. Then why can Mike Masaoka's testimony be accepted with more credence than mine? He is also 40 years older.

There have been stories advanced about people being shot trying to escape the relocation centers or segregation center of Tule Lake. I know of no such instance where people were shot while trying to escape. If anyone was shot, I would have known about it. I have no memory nor is there such a record of anyone being shot while trying to escape. Shootings due to riots and uprisings, yes. But the trouble was not between the United States military forces, but rather between the pro-Japan and pro-American forces within the centers themselves.

Because Manzanar relocation center and Tule Lake segregation center were located in California, which was a military designated zone, evacuees could not come and go as freely because they were in the evacuated areas. But many by the thousands were relocated as the War Relocation Authority was successful in finding jobs and did its very best to get people to leave the centers once jobs were available. And of course, many thousands did leave and became a part of the overall war effort.

The War Relocation Authority was established only after evacuees who moved out on their own ran into trouble from the local population in certain areas where wartime hysteria and the climate of war made it difficult to distinguish between Japanese and Americans of Japanese ancestry.

Many of the older aliens refused to leave the centers because they felt more secure and remained in peace with their families.

It is inaccurate to refer to persons who have been evacuated from the west coast as "Japanese". The Japanese are people who live in Japan. Although there were many alien adults among the evacuees, not in all cases were these "Japanese". Even in the case of aliens, they had come to the United States because they wanted to live here and earn a living, and two-thirds of their children were born here and were thus United States citizens.

Likewise the term "camp", when used to refer to a relocation center, is likewise objectionable. It leads people to confuse the relocation centers administered by the War Relocation Authority with the detention camps and internment camps administered by other agencies.

The evacuees were not "internees". They had not been "interned". Internees are people who were individually suspected of being dangerous to the internal security of the United States, who had been given a hearing on charges to that effect, and were then ordered confined in an internment camp administered by the army.

It is true there were armed guards at each center. These guards, in addition to other problems, helped protect the people in the centers from misguided attacks from local citizens. These guards were the minimum of external security, and in the event of riots, were not sufficient to quell the uprising, so that military aid had to be called in during the trouble with pro-Japan forces within the centers.

I received a copy of a letter from Dr. Harold S. Jacoby, who was my internal security officer at Tule Lake relocation center before it was turned over to the military as a segregation center for the disloyals.

Dr. Jacoby wrote that "most of the talk about 'armed guards', 'barbed wire fences' and 'machine guns' come from persons who were not in the camps or who were too young to know much about them. This is the part of the rhetoric that has grown up in recent years, and bears very little relationship to facts. Yes, there were camp perimeters, and these were perfunctorily controlled by MP's in Jeeps. And they carried side arms. But the perimeters were quite a distance away from the main camp areas, which made them 'out of sight and out of mind' most of the time".

The War Relocation Centers were not only self-governing, but the evacuees were their own police force within the block areas. As Dr. Jacoby stated in his recent letter, February 1981, this redress and reparations "isn't a Japanese American issue, it's a JACL issue, motivated by a desire to be militant".

I am not very happy with my efforts with writing the introductory remarks for Lillian Baker's book, The Concentration Camp Conspiracy: A Second Pearl Harbor, but I hope her book will be published and widely purchased.

It is with my whole-hearted consent and appreciation that I have allowed her to read my testimony before this Commission and ask that this testimony be made part of the record of this Commission and part of the historical accuracy of this widely propagandized and misunderstood action of World War II, the evacuation and relocation of persons of Japanese ancestry on the west coast of the United States.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, Congress consistently spends much more than it takes in. We have already placed an unfair fiscal burden on the next generation because of the failure of Congress to control spending. It strikes me as the height of fiscal irresponsibility for our generation to further burden the next generation for what we perceive as the mistakes of a past generation.

Where is this $1.3 billion going to come from? I've heard no one worry about that. Are we simply to pile it on to the huge Federal debt that we add to year after year and let the next generation worry about it?

Our distinguished colleague in the House, Congressman Bill Frenzel, captured the essence of these monetary payments when he said: "The Committee is asking us to purge ourselves of somebody else's guilt with another generation's money." [17 Sep 87; H7583]

Mr. President, furthermore, I find the rationale for reparations set forth in the Governmental Affairs Committee report to be incredible. The report states that "[t]he ultimate goal of this legislation is to prevent the occurrence of another similar event."

Does any Member of this body seriously believe that any future administration will be deterred from taking similar action because we have required compensation 45 years after the fact—when most, if not all, of the people responsible for the decision have long since left Government service. In fact most are probably no longer alive.

Such an attenuated relationship between the commission of an act that, in retrospect, is perceived to be wrong, and the sanctions related thereto have nothing to do with deterrence. It represents only the misguided notion that the dollar sign is the only genuine symbol of contrition.

In fact, Mr. President, the rationale stated in the Commission report itself eloquently undermines the recommendation for reparations in these words:

> Two and one half years behind the barbed wire of a relocation camp, branded potentially disloyal because of one's ethnicity alone, these injustices cannot be translated into dollars and cents. Some find such an attempt in itself a means of minimizing the enormity of these events in a constitutional republic. History cannot be undone. Anything we do now must inevitably be an expression of regret and an affirmation of our better values as a nation, not an accounting which balances or erases the events of the war that is beyond anyone's power.

Mr. President, I further oppose the manner in which these individual payments would be distributed. The bill would unfairly impose heavy administrative burdens on the Attorney General to investigate, find and pay each eligible recipient.

The Attorney General is specifically prohibited even from requiring eligible persons to make application for these payments. This duty would require the Department to commit a considerable amount of manpower and resources to the search for eligible recipients.

Mr. President, let me speak briefly about title III of the bill, entitled "Aleutian and Pribilof Islands Restitution." The Commission observed that "[t]he Aleut evacuation and the removal of persons of Japanese ancestry from the west coast during the same period were separate events—neither caused nor influenced the other * * . The evacuation of the Aleuts was a reasonable precaution taken to ensure their safety." ("Personal Justice Denied,"* at 318.) The focus of the Commission's report was upon its conclusion that "the evacuation of the Aleuts was not planned in a timely or thoughtful manner," leading to hardships upon the persons exposed to the condition flowing from their evacuation from the war zone.

Mr. President, many activities undertaken by the Government during World War II could be criticized, in restrospect, as untimely or poorly planned. However, I don't believe that hardships of persons properly removed from a war zone provide any justification for special treatment for that group as opposed to other individuals whose lives were disrupted and who suffered hardship or death during the war.

Grave injustices are often the product of war. Whether we are talking about the loss of limb or life or the loss of property, the result is often agony and human suffering. From "The Longest Day" on the beaches of Normandy to "A Bridge Too Far" in Arnheim, war turns both logic and life upside down. The survival instinct does not always produce well-conceived decisions when scrutinized with the benefit of 20/20 hindsight. The result is that lives are shattered and families permanently scarred.

What do we say to the families of our men who died in Sicily not because they were killed by enemy fire but because our bombers mistakenly identified them as the enemy?

Mr. President, I fear the potentially grave consequences of extending the principle of restitution contained in this bill. Attempting to put a price tag on misbegotton policies of the past poses the spectacle of unwieldy precedent. It can be argued that the denial of civil rights can just as easily derive from Government inaction as from Government action. It is not too difficult to think of arguments concerning the need for restitution for the period before the 1954 decision in Brown versus the Board of Education.

There is not one here I think that would suggest that $20,000 is the value of having been denied one's liberties for a period of time. I have never heard that argument. There is no one that suggests that $20,000 makes things right. There is no one that suggests that $20,000 is adequate compensation for the time one spent away from home and in a relocation center. So what is it? It is argued that it is an indication of the significance, of the symbol, of the sincerity of our action.

Mr. President, have we reached such a state in our society that unless money is exchanged, the sincerity of our expression is brought into question? The logic of materialistic reductinism in my judgment not only has the potential of demeaning the gravity of the experience at issue but of subsuming our overcoming the more important task of ensuring that future generations are taught the lessons to be learned from this unfortunate episode in our Nation's history.

There are many cases of legal wrongs in America where we do not respond with money damages. I do not know anyone yet anyway who is advocating that we go back and pay $20,000 to each of the black schoolchildren of this country who may have been victimized by the separate but equal education policies that prevailed before the Supreme Court decision in 1954 declaring that to be unconstitutional.

The fourth amendment to the Constitution says that we shall not permit unlawful searches and seizures. Pursuant to that, we developed the Miranda warning. Are we going to now go and say that those who were incarcerated after convictions that did not entail the reading of Miranda rights should be paid by $20,000 by Congress because that civil right was violated?

The eighth amendment to the Constitution, says that we shall not allow cruel and unusual punishment, and yet we know that there were prisoners detained at Alcatraz who were kept in dungeons and chained. Shall we go back and award them $20,000 because their civil liberties were violated?

Mr. President, recently another unfortunate event occurred which suggests that a significant amount of the support for this legislation is based on nothing more than the money.

Last fall, our distinguished colleague in the House, Congressman Daniel Lungren, was picked to fill the vacant seat of California State Treasurer. At the time, no one predicted that he would have any problem being confirmed in his home State of California. Congressman Lungren had fully supported the establishment of the Commission; he had been the only Member of Congress to serve as a member of the Commission; and he supported the principle that a national, public apology and a massive, national educational effort is warranted.

Mr. President, no one can question the genuine concern and regret of Conressman Lungren over the relocation of Japanese-Americans. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of Congressman Lungren's testimony before the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations be printed in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the Congressman's testimony was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Statement of Hon. Dan Lungren, a Representative in Congress From the State of California

Mr. Lungren. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

First I want to thank you for the opportunity to testify before this subcomittee. I had testified previously when the subcommittee was under previous leadership.

As we all know, the bill before us is the legislative byproduct of the recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians. Nearly 6 years ago Congress created this Federal Commission to review the facts and circumstances surrounding Executive Order 9066 signed by President Roosevelt which resulted in the exclusion and internment of 120,000 Japanese-Americans and resident aliens on the west coast.

In June 1983, the Commission, by an 8–1 vote, recommended that the United States pay $1.5 billion to provide a one-time per capita compensatory payment of $20,000 to each of the surviving persons excluded from their places of residence.

As the vice chairman of the Commission and the only sitting Member of Congress to serve on that Commission, I was the sole dissenter on the issue of individual reparations. I want it clearly understood that I signed off on and supported the major recommendations and findings of the Commission but did dissent on this matter.

I got involved in this Commission because I come from a part of the country where this was very much a part of real life following Pearl Harbor, and yet as I was growing up I had no knowledge of it. I had no idea that Japanese-Americans or Japanese nationals who had shown no hint of disloyalty to the United States were removed from that area of the country and even my own area. I was astounded to learn from the testimony of a doctor the very hospital that I was operated on when I was 4 years old, that he was removed from that staff shortly after Pearl Harbor because he was considered a risk.

It was unknown to me that there were large areas of Terminal Island, which presently houses the Long Beach Naval Station and the Long Beach Naval Shipyard—that there was a large population of Japanese who had been there for years and that they were removed, never to return again.

I thought it important that we learn about that and if I didn't know anything about it, being from that area, having lived my whole life in that area, most other Americans of my generation and generations after would not know, and that we ought to set the record straight.

It seems to me that we ought to recognize that although H.R. 442 was introduced in January 1985, the concept of making reparations for redressing grievances of these American citizens of Japanese dissent has already been before the Congress. As my colleague, Mr. Lowry, has pointed out, he had a similar bill in 1979.

It was during that time that I cosponsored H.R. 5499 which, instead, established the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians. The subcommittee, under the direction of former Congressman George Danielson, rejected the idea at that time of going ahead with a comprehensive claims program granting monetary redress to the injured parties.

In reviewing Congressman Moorhead's floor statement in the July 21, 1980, Congressional Record, it becomes readily apparent that the committee was concerned at that time about the tremendous cost of such a program, and after having reviewed the legislative history of the Commission, it appears that H.R. 442 or other legislative vehicles carrying provisions for reparations may have never received a legislative review had it not been for the compromise made between Members of Congress supporting the concept of the Commission, such as myself, and those supporting a reparations type bill.

In fact, in scanning the Senate testimony during the 96th Congress which considered that legislation and passed it out, one witness quoted a Senator as saying, "The only condition that I made the other four Members of Congress to agree to was no monetary reparations would ever be asked. If they had not agreed, I would not have endorsed that bill."

At the very least, I think it is clear that monetary reparations were never the sine qua non of future governmental actions, and I must say that, because I recall talking with other Members at the time I supported this legislation—talking with other Members of the House about whether I should serve on that Commission. There were a lot of other Members who could have asked for that assignment. No others, that I'm aware of, asked for it. I asked for it because of my strong feelings on the subject.

But at that time it was never said to me, it was never stated, that unless the commission comes out with recommendations of reparations and unless the Congress follows through with reparations, anything you do is meaningless, and I find it rather discomforting to have it suggested now that, unless reparations are a part of what I think would be a proper apology, that it means nothing.

Once the recommendations of the Commission were released, it has become difficult to restrain the cry for redress and reparation. As the sole dissenter on the issue of individual reparations, some might conclude that I find fault with the basic conclusions. I do not. The history of the period leaves little room for doubt that a grave injustice was committed, that Executive Order 9066 compelled the internment of nearly 120,000 Japanese-Americans and resident aliens living on the west coast.

Parenthetically, I might remark that it was interesting to me to find out that Japanese-Americans were not removed from Hawaii; they were removed from the west coast. They were not removed from the area where the attack from Japan took place, and the reason was, when the recommendation first went to the military commanders in Hawaii, the military commanders in Hawaii demurred, saying that if you removed the Japanese Americans and Japanese nationals from Hawaii, we wouldn't have the work force we needed to do the things that were necessary to have the support for our defense on Hawaii. So there are some rather interesting factors that come into consideration when you analyze the whole area.

I did fully concur with the findings of the Commission that the implementation of the Executive order was largely a result of race prejudice, hysteria, and a failure of political leadership. But I happen to be able to say that from the point of hindsight, and they say hindsight is 20/20.

As one who was born after World War II, had my father been killed instead of just being wounded in the Normandy invasion, I wouldn't have the privilege of serving here; I was conceived and born after World War II. I doubt that my generation has a full appreciation for the difficult plight that the United States was in during the onset of World War II.

In one of the Commission's hearings, we had a military historian from the Department of Defense devote a large portion of the meeting describing the terrible fix that the United States was in. In his book, "Born Free and Equal" published in 1944, Ansel Adams, a vocal opponent of the internment process until his death, refers to these difficult circumstances of the war in these words:

"The spectacular victories of Japan, the crippling of our fleet at Pearl Harbor, the possibility of invasion of our west coast, all were facts of tragic import and at the time were considered more than ample justification of the mass exodus."

In addition, there was the threat of public retaliation against the Japanese American population.

"We may feel that racial antagonisms fanned the flame of decision, but the fact remains that we were in the most potentially precarious moment of our history, stunned, seriously hurt, unorganized for actual war."

These were his words. Please don't misunderstand. I believe the internment and relocation experience of our fellow Americans and resident aliens was wrong. However, when a Nation is at war, fighting for its very survival, it should come as no surprise that wrong-headed decisions can be made.

Another area I believe that has not received the kind of treatment it deserved were the Magic cables. As a commissioner, I know we did not thoroughly explore this avenue. I know that it came to our attention late, and let me take it one step further: Had I not insisted that an addendum be included on the Magic cables, it would not have been done by the Commission.

Again, this does not in any way give credence to the decision for the internment. However, it does shed a great deal of light on the circumstances of why President Roosevelt may have made the decision to relocate and intern. Now just picture messages such as these being sent by the Japanese Embassy in Washington coming across President Roosevelt's desk.

I want to make sure that when I state these, this does not mean this was the fact, this does not mean the Japanese Americans or resident aliens were in fact disloyal, but this is what the Japanese—that is, the Japanese who were here serving the Japanese Imperial forces, the Japanese Government, not Japanese Americans, but these are the cables they were sending back to their people in Japan which we intercepted and we decoded:

"Utilization of our second generation and our resident nationals. In view of the fact that if there is any slip in this phase, our people in the United States will be subjected to considerable persecution. The utmost caution must be exercised. We shall maintain connection with our second generations who are present in the U.S. Army. We also have connections with our second generations working in airplane plants for intelligence purposes."

Now that's what President Roosevelt had before him. He didn't know the hindsight we were going to be given that not one Japanese American was disloyal, and that's the crux of the problem we have here; we're judging today; and I think it is absolutely necessary for us to say an apology is in order and enact an apology to make sure people know Japanese Americans were not disloyal. However, I think it is another thing to say in retrospect that President Roosevelt was really acting out of race prejudice, because I don't think that's the case.

We do know now that not one Japanese American or national was accused or convicted of one act of espionage. However, the events surrounding the internment were highly charged. Men of great stature, such as Earl Warren, were personally lobbying President Roosevelt to favor relocation of Japanese Americans. Furthermore, the Congress, the White House, and the U.S. Supreme Court sanctioned these actions. Even well-respected papers at that time like the Los Angeles Times supported the relocating of Japanese Americans. Again, in retrospect, they were wrong, but I think we have to focus on what President Roosevelt had in front of him.

As a Member of Congress from the Republican Party, the party around whose neck has been hung the visage of Herbert Hoover and the Depression for years and years and years, it might be easy to say that the most famous Democratic President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, signed the Executive order for political reasons. However, I have to think, after reviewing the record, that it was for a much higher reason. He as well as his Cabinet, I believe, had our Nation's best interest at heart.

It is far more difficult to analyze the decision in this context, in the context of all the surrounding circumstances, but I believe we do a disservice to history, we do a disservice to future generations, if we simply say this was race prejudice.

What do we need a commission for? What does that teach us? We know there are elements of race prejudice in every country, including our own, but the question is, how do you avoid having that complication in other legitimate interests, and how do you avoid making the mistakes we made in the past? I don't have the answers to that.

I don't think the historical record we created by the Commission is complete. That's why I, for instance, support a fund for historical scholarship, so that by analyzing this chapter in history we can avoid these things in the future. Indeed, I think we'll only learn from the mistakes of this historical episode and avoid the repetition if we recognize that there was more to this than simple racism.

Let me express my concerns as to why I believe monetary redress and/or reparations would not be appropriate.

Although the work recently completed by the commission comes over 40 years after the event, the U.S. Government has been making an honest effort to correct this American tragedy. We ought to review the actions.

In 1948 Congress passed the Japanese Americans Evacuation Claims Act. This gave persons of Japanese ancestry the right to claim from the Government real and personal property losses that occurred as a consequence of the exclusion. Although it was below actual economic losses $37 million was paid in claims.

In 1972, the Social Security Act was amended so that Japanese Americans who were over the age of 18 at the time of their internment would be deemed to have earned and contributed to the Social Security System during that period and therefore receive benefits as a result.

In 1978 the Federal civil service retirement provisions were amended to allow the Japanese Americans civil service retirement credit for time spent in detention after the age of 18.

On February 19, 1976, President Ford issued the Proclamation Order No. 4418 which rescinded and apologized for Executive Order 9066 exactly 34 years after the event.

The U.S. Government has also sought to redress this rather dark moment in history through the establishment of the commission and its detailed and comprehensive analysis of the event. We have made the recommendations public through the report "Personal Justice Denied."

I'm also encouraged that the Smithsonian Institution plans in the fall of 1987 to present an exhibition entitled "With Liberty and Justice for All: The Japanese American Experience in the U.S. Constitution" detailing this scene in American history. The purpose of the exhibit is to enhance our Nation's awareness of this particular aspect of World War II.

It's vitally important that we make these types of public acknowledgments. We simply cannot forget. I would suggest that we carry the public exposure further by making possible similar exhibitions.

Furthermore, throughout the country, high school, university, and history classes should stress the human cost of war by discussing such important human events as the internment of Japanese Americans and resident aliens. Such acknowledgments would only serve to educate Americans of this and future generations to the sometimes tragic occurrences that are part of our Nation's history and, I might say, give us clues as to how we avoid some of those most tragic occurrences.

An official apology by way of legislation and the establishment of the fund, that I mentioned before, for historical scholarship would certainly be appropriate.

It's impossible to say whether these actions will ever provide total recompense to the entire Japanese American population. Nonetheless, I believe our Government has taken several genuine efforts in an effort to adequately express our sense of concern over executive actions taken nearly a half century ago.

Perhaps the question we must ask ourselves is whether the expenditure of nearly $2 billion is the only way to show proper remorse. Do we truly believe that nothing can be genuine unless it involves coin of the realm? Have we reached such a state in our society that unless money is attached to it nothing can be a sincere expression of concern or action?

Today we all know we have an insurance liability crisis upon us. In the midst of this crisis, television ads for law firms tell us that the coin of the realm argument is alive and well in some quarters of our society. However, I think most Americans are beginning to see the adverse social implications of such a position.

Finally, we must pose this question: If Japanese Americans and the resident aliens that were interned are allowed to seek redress, does that mean all military decisions can and will be reviewed by a generation later?

What do we say to the families of our men who died in Sicily, Italy, because our bombers—our bombers, U.S. bombers—mistakenly identified them as the enemy? Can they petition the Congress and then the courts? What do we do to the military and our own national security if we set a precedent that informs them every decision made will be reviewed at a given time in the future? What do you say to my father who was injured in France, or what do you say to my mother who was denied the presence of my father for 2½ years while he fought through the wars of the European Theater? Moreover, in light of the current fiscal environment, the passage of any sizable reparations bill by the Congress appears very unlikely.

When this request for individual funds is placed against those of Social Security recipients, food stamps, and nutrition programs, senior citizen housing, and the national defense needs within the context of an already hemorrhaging Federal deficit, I have to ask the question, Does it stand up?

I'm fearful that should such a principle of restitution be carried further to its logical extension, such a principle of restitution, in fact, could have untold consequences. Should the Chinese be paid back for their underpaid role in helping the railroads open the American West? Should people of German ancestry be compensated for being denied rights in World War I?

Or, as the August 15, 1983, issue of the New Republic stated:

"If we compensate Japanese Americans for their losses, are we not then morally bound to hand the country back over to the Indians or bankrupt the Treasury paying for what our ancestors stole, and are we to calculate the present-day value of slave labor and start mailing out checks?"

Finally, do we as a nation want to set a precedent and place a price tag of $20,000 apiece on the loss of individual freedom? Quoting from the New Republic again:

"It is fine for one generation to judge another by its own elevated standards, but putting a price tag on mistakes of the past establishes an unwieldy precedent."

The conclusions of the Commission, I believe, are sound. Race prejudice, lack of political leadership, and war hysteria can and did lead this Nation to make a gross and tragic mistake of the internment. I might say, there were gross and tragic mistakes made by our military officers at the highest levels during World War II that resulted in the loss of life, maiming, permanent disablement to men who were in the military.

In conclusion, I would stress the imperative of not getting caught up in an acrimonious debate on monetary redress. I think it's far more important for us not to lose sight of the lessons to be learned from this episode in our Nation's history. This Nation enjoys a rich history of respecting the rights of its citizens. Perhaps the proper response now should be a reassertion of the words of President Ford through legislation of Congress as he confidently stated that we have learned from the tragedy of that long ago experience forever to treasure liberty and justice for each individual American.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HELMS. But Congressman LUNGREN made one mistake: as one can see from his testimony, he opposed the individual reparations provision. In fact, when H.R. 442 legislation was considered in the House, Congressman LUNGREN offered an amendment to strike the reparations from the bill.

And what the result of Congressman LUNGREN's individual payments? Let me read to you from an article that appeared in the February 25, 1988, edition of the Washington Post:

> Lungren, a conservative from Long Beach, is in a pitched battle for the job, almost solely because of the efforts of [Donald] Tamaki, [Henry] Der, [John] Ota, [Hoyt] Zia, and dozens of other Asian-American political activists. . . .
> Wealthy Asian Americans, distressed by Lungren's outspoken opposition to reparations for Japanese Americans interned during World War II, have lobbied against his confirmation, a rare move for persons who usually ask little more than a favorable attitude toward business among politicians they generously support with contributions.

Mr. President, I believe that the unfortunate situation in which Congressman LUNGREN finds himself demonstrates what he, Senator Hayakawa, Dr. Masugi, and so many others feared: the focus on individual monetary payments obfuscates the true issue involved in this debate and demeans what should be an important lesson of history.

Mr. President, before we move to a final vote on this bill, I ask unanimous consent that several items be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. First, is a very thoughtful article by Mr. Robert K. Gordon that appeared in The New Republic magazine; second, is a letter to the editor by Dr. Masugi that appeared in the New York Times; finally, there is an excellent article by the syndicated columnist James Kilpatrick.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. President, as I stand here and argue against this bill, I'm sure many proponents of the bill will simply say that I can't empathize with the plight of the Japanese-Americans who were relocated or that I have no sympathy for the ordeal they suffered. So let me conclude with the words of Senator Hayakawa, whose sincerity and credentials no one can question:

> The Nisei, with their courage, and their parents, by their industry, have won for Japanese Americans the admiration and respect of all Americans. Japanese Americans have an average level of education higher than any other ethnic group, including whites. They have a higher representation in the learned professions—medicine, law, engineering, computer science—than other ethnic groups—and in this respect they are doing as well as another group famous for their respect for learning—namely, the Jews. The per capita income of Japanese-Americans is $500 a year above the national average. And they have, with a population of less than half a million, three representatives in the U.S. Senate, while the blacks, with a population approaching 23 million, have none. What more can Japanese-Americans want? We are living today at a time when Japanese-Americans are almost a privileged class, with their notorious scholastic aptitude, their industriousness, and their team spirit in whatever occupation they find themselves.
> Mr. President, I am proud to be a Japanese-American. But when a small but vocal group of Japanese-Americans calling themselves a redress committee demand a cash indemnity of $25,000 for all those who went to relocation camps during World War II, including those who were infants at the time and those who are now dead, a total of some two and three-quarters of a billion dollars—we have been seeing this in a series of articles being published in the Washington Post—my flesh crawls with shame and embarrassment.
> Let me remind the Japanese American Redress Committee that we also live in a time when American industry is seriously threatened by Japanese competition—in automobiles, steel, cameras, television, and radio sets, tape recorders, and watches. I warn the Japanese Americans who demand about $3 billion of financial redress for events of 41 years ago from which nobody is suffering today, that their efforts can only result in a backlash against both Japanese Americans and Japan. And to make such a demand at a time of the budget stringencies of the Reagan administration is unwise enough, but to make this demand against the background of their own record as America's most successful minority is simply to invite ridicule.
> Let me remind the Japanese Americans that we are, as we say repeatedly in our Pledge of Allegiance, "one nation," striving to achieve "liberty and justice for all."
> This means—and I say this to black Americans and Mexican Americans and all other ethnic political groups—let us stop playing ethnic politics to gain something for our own group at the expense of all others. Let us continue to think of America as "one" nation, under God, indivisible" and let us act accordingly.

EXHIBIT 1

[A very thoughtful commentary in the New Republic]

CASUALTIES OF HISTORY

(Robert K. Gordon)

War is seldom a congenial time for civil liberties. When the siege mentality sets in, nations and leaders behave in ways that would be unthinkable in calmer times. During the Civil War President Lincoln summarily suspended the writ of habeas corpus and ignored Chief Justice Taney's ruling that the suspension was unconstitutional. During World War I, Justice Oliver Wendell Homes brushed aside the First Amendment claims of several antidraft pamphleteers who had been branded as criminals for expressing their views. And during World War II the Supreme Court, in a ruling it later had the good sense to reverse, made the extraordinary assertion that compelling children in public schools to salute the flag—even against the dictates of their religion—did not offend their rights of conscience.

But the ugliest product of wartime hysteria in this century may have been the forced evacuation of one hundred twenty thousand American citizens and resident aliens of Japanese origin from the West Coast in 1942 and their confinement in internment camps. That ordeal is the subject of Personal Justice Denied, the lengthy report recently issued by a congressionally chartered panel. The Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, whose members include former Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg, and former chairman of the Commission on Civil Rights Arthur S. Flemming, branded the episode a "grave injustice" which was unwarranted by anything remotely resembling military necessity. "The broad historical causes which shaped these decisions," the commission found, "were race prejudice, war hysteria and a failure of political leadership."

All three branches of the federal government came away from the affair with sullied hands. Ten weeks after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed an executive order authorizing the military to exclude from designated areas whomever they thought necessary, to guard against "fifth column activity." The ethnic Japanese were soon ordered to leave the West Coast, first "voluntarily," and then, when they failed to leave on their own, under Army escort. Evacuees were assembled temporarily at racetracks and fairgrounds, and then shipped off to "relocation centers" in barren areas of the West, where most of them remained for two-and-a-half years. Congress put its stamp of approval on the exclusion by enacting criminal penalties for violating rules issued under President Roosevelt's executive order, and the Supreme Court got into the act by declaring the evacuation constitutionally permissible.

Among the main instigators of the government's policy were West Coast politicans who yielded to the public clamor and took up the cry against the "yellow peril." Agitating for the exclusion of the ethnic Japanese from the region was a way of scoring easy points with a public that had been hostile to the Japanese for more than forty years before Pearl Harbor. It entailed virtually no cost, because the U.S.-born citizen generation of Japanese was just approaching voting age in 1940. Supporters of evacuation in California included the governor, Culbert Olsen, the mayor of Los Angeles, Fletcher Bowron, and the state attorney general, Earl Warren. Later, as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Warren said: "I have since deeply regretted the removal order and my own testimony advocating it, because it was not in keeping with our American concept of freedom and the rights of citizens."

A few voices of reason in the government, notably Attorney General Francis Biddle and others in the Justice Department, did protest the War Department's plan. "A great many of the West Coast people distrust the Japanese, various special interests would welcome their removal from good farm land and the elimination of their competition . . . ," Biddle wrote in a memorandum sent to President Roosevelt on February 17, 1942. "My last advice from the War Department is that there is no evidence of imminent attack and from the F.B.I. that there is no evidence of planned sabotage." F.B.I. Director J. Edgar Hoover, hardly known as a civil libertarian, told Biddle, "The necessity for mass evacuation is based primarily upon public and political pressure rather than on factual data." But in the end even Biddle was unwilling to approach the President and argue that the planned evacuation of the Japanese-Americans was unconstitutional, as long as the War Department deemed it a military necessity.

Even today a stubborn few persist in seeing no evil. John J. McCloy, then assistant secretary of war and one of the architects of the roundup, and now a New York lawyer, remarked not long ago that the mere suggestion that we ought to apologize to the Japanese-Americans sends him "up the wall." But the historical record is what should really send him up the wall. To this day, there is not a single documented case of sabotage or espionage by an ethnic Japanese in the United States. The simple fact is that the Nisei (the first generation of ethnic Japanese born in the United States) and the Issei (the immigrant generation) were presumed guilty by reason of racial affiliation.

Clearly, this country's treatment of Japanese-Americans during World War II was a moral outrage. But the issue raises a more troubling question: what, if anything should be done now to make amends for an offense committed by the United States government forty-two years ago? The commission's principal response, released as a recommendation to Congress earlier this summer has stirred up powerful emotions on all sides of the issue. The panel suggested that the government seek out every living evacuee—there are about sixty thousand—and pay each one $20,000 for loss of property and income. The total cost of the panel's recommendations would come to $1.5 billion. Congress has followed the commission's lead, and there are now bills to this effect in both Houses. The House version, introduced by Representative Mike Lowry, Democrat of Washington, would cost an additional $1 billion, because for every deceased or missing evacuee, $20,000 would go into a special fund. The Senate version, introduced by Senator Alan Cranston, has a similar provision but leaves the amount of the redress to "the appropriate congressional committees."

Individual financial redress has a certain commonsense appeal. Families in some areas were given no more than a few days' notice of the evacuation, and were forced to sell off farms, businesses, homes, and cars at distress-sale prices. As laborers in the internment camps, evacuees were paid a mere fraction of what they could have earned on the open market. It seems quite simple, then: since the government's unjust policies resulted in some very measurable costs to the Japanese, the victimizers—not the victims—ought to be the ones to pay. Unfortunately, the proposal for individual compensation is so weighed by complications that it cannot survive scrutiny.

From a purely administrative standpoint, the redress proposal is crudely fashioned. Although $20,000 may accurately represent the average economic loss of an evacuee, it is unfair to bestow this amount across the board. If the payment is intended as financial compensation rather than for "pain and suffering," as the commission contends, is it reasonable to "compensate" equally a farmer who was ruined and an infant whose losses were entirely of the unqualified kind? Also, because $37 million—an admittedly inadequately amount—was paid out under the Japanese-American Evacuation Claims Act of 1948 to those who could prove their losses, some evacuees would be doubly compensated. Finally, the commission's restriction of payments to the living deprives some internees' progeny of what arguably is rightfully theirs.

But the more fundamental difficulties involve what might be called "the equity issue." Fairness requires not merely a satisfying outcome in an isolated case, but consistent treatment for groups or individuals who have been wronged in similar ways. Two groups should immediately come to mind: American Indians and blacks. If we compensate the Japanese-Americans for their losses, are we not then morally bound to hand the country back over to the Indians or bankruptcy the treasury paying for what our ancestors stole? And are we to calculate the present day value of slave labor and start mailing out checks? The case of the Japanese Americans may seem distinguishable from the others because the payments would be "manageable," but it is a strange principle that compensates small injustices and lets immense ones go unremedied. Would anyone argue that temporal proximity gives the Japanese internment priority? Some would reply that settling older scores should come first.

These extreme examples are introduced not to muddle the issue, not to shrug off recent injustices by pointing to ancient ones, but to demonstrate the folly of viewing history as a big debit-credit sheet. The legalistic language of injury and compensation is a second tongue to most Americans. Thus it is not surprising that four decades after the fact, many still view the wrongs done to the Japanese as one hundred twenty thousand separate tort actions. It is fine for one generation to judge another by its own elevated standards, but putting a price tag on mistakes of the past establishes an unwiely precedent. No amount of money can reverse the loss of liberty, the prolonged disruption of family life, or the personal stigma of suspected disloyalty, all of which continue to exact a psychological price from those who were interned. But as the commission noted, lasting economic scars were minimal; "Entrance and acceptance into the mainstream of American society through the conventional modes of success have been largely accomplished." One might also argue—and some Japanese Americans have—that cash payments would trivalize the suffering of the evacuees and give the false impression that the score had been evened.

The commission had the right answers all along, but they were overshadowed by the proposal for individual compensation. To start with, the panel suggested that Congress pass a point resolution, to be signed by the President," which recognizes that a grave injustice was done and offers the apologies of the nation." The commission was also right to advise Congress to establish a special foundation to sponsor research on civil liberties issues, and to disseminate the commission's findings to textbook publishers, libraries, and educators. After all, ignorance and racism are what made it so easy for demagogues to play on popular fears about the Japanese-Americans in the first place. Distributing large sums of money would do nothing to eradicate these evils, but public education would.

FEW JAPANESE-AMERICANS WERE ACTUALLY INTERNED

To the Editor:

"America's Debt to Japanese-Americans" (editorial, Oct. 4) makes confusions typical of the partisans of proposed redress legislation, which calls for $20,000 payments to ethnic Japanese relocated in World War II, for an "education and research" fund and for a national apology.

You continually refer to the "internment" of Japanese-Americans, where even the partisan national commission report on the relocation, "Personal Justice Denied," is careful to distinguish between the relocation of more than 100,000 ethnic Japanese and the internment or imprisonment that was suffered by a few thousand aliens or others whose actions made them suspect.

This is an important point, for those who were relocated could readily secure permission to leave and re-enter the relocation centers, as my parents did, to seek seasonal employment or go to college. Government-offered jobs in the areas outside the restricted West Coast went begging. Contrary to the impression made by your words (and photograph!), those relocated could have property sent for, own cars and order from Sears catalogues. But these and numerous other historical misunderstandings made by critics of the relocation do not address the main problem with redress proposals.

First, critics of the policy do not understand the political situation of that time, thus preventing redress legislation from having any relevance to a future crisis. You blame racism and xenophobia for the decision to relocate. Xenophobia literally understood seems entirely appropriate toward a Japan that had just attacked and which itself issued fervent racial, nationalistic appeals. To appreciate this is not to justify racist practices that prevailed throughout the country in the 1940's.

Second, and more important, $20,000 redress payments made more than a generation after the fact do not address latter-day wrongs. They will doubtless make a rapidly assimilating minority more discrete than ever. Congressmen parceling out such windfalls from the earnings of the current generation are scarcely indulging in an educational exercise. Moreover, any money spent for "education and research on the internment" is likely merely to reaffirm the historical errors that scholars have noted in the redress literature. Hence it would be a "grievous wrong" for President Reagan not to veto such an inappropriate measure.

JAPANESE-AMERICAN COMPENSATION: A BAD BILL

(By James J. Kilpatrick)

Now pending on the Senate's calendar, subject to floor debate at any time, is a bad bill that comes to us laden with good intentions.

At a cost of $1.2 billion, the bill would pay $20,000 each to those surviving Americans of Japanese ancestry who were interned on the West Coast in World War II. The measure ought to be quietly retired.

It is not easy—it is probably futile—to oppose the Senate bill. It heads for the floor bearing the names of 75 sponsors. A companion measure passed the House last September by a vote of 243 to 141.

Only a heart of stone, it is said, could fail to be moved by the injustice visited upon loyal American citizens 46 years ago. It is time to apologize, we are told; it is time to make amends.

The trouble with that compassionate plea is that it comes to us through a rearview mirror. It embodies the hindsight wisdom of the Monday morning quarterback. The bill carries a finding that "there was no military or security reason for the internment," but that is the conclusion now. It assuredly was not the conclusion then.

Two generations have grown up since the Japanese launched their attack on Pearl Harbor. Today we count the Japanese as friends and allies. In the winter of 1941-42 they were enemies.

Today it seems absurd to imagine that the Japanese might have invaded California. This seemed not at all absurd at the time. In 1988 we scarcely can imagine risks of sabotage and espionage. Reasonable men vividly perceived them.

Acting upon these fears, Congress authorized President Roosevelt to issue what became Executive Order 9066. Pursuant to that order, the commanding general of West Coast forces proclaimed Civilian Exclusion Order No. 34.

After May 9, 1942, more than 110,000 U.S. citizens of Japanese descent were to be uprooted from their homes. They were taken by train to internment camps. There they remained until the war's end in 1945. An estimated 60,000 survive.

As the Supreme Court noted in the case of Korematsu v. United States, most of the internees were loyal Americans. But some were not. More than 5,000 of them refused to swear allegiance to the United States and to renounce allegiance to the emporer. Several thousand evacuees requested repatriation to Japan.

It is all very well to say today that these citizens should have received fair hearings, but in the spring of 1942 we were involved in a desperate war for national survival. Due process had to yield to the exigencies of the day.

The exclusion order came before the High Court in 1944. By a vote of 6 to 3 the court upheld the order. Justice Hugo Black, one of the great civil libertarians of all time, wrote the opinion. Felix Frankfurter and William O. Douglas agreed. Listen to what Black said:

"We are not unmindful of the hardships imposed by the exclusion order upon a large group of American citizens. But hardships are part of war, and war is an aggregation of hardships. All citizens alike, both in and out of uniform, feel the impact of war in greater or lesser measure. . . ."

"Compulsory exclusion of large groups of citizens from their homes, except under circumstances of direst emergency, is inconsistent with our basic governmental institutions. But when under conditions of modern warfare our shores are threatened by hostile forces, the power to protect must be commensurate with the threatened danger."

The Senate bill describes the "significant human suffering" imposed upon the interned families. Granted. But others suffered hardship also: 292,000 died in battle, 615,000 suffered wounds. Total casualties exceeded one million.

In looking back on those days, we ought to take guidance from Lord Macaulay. This was the precept of that great historian: "As we would have our descendants judge us, so we ought to judge our fathers. In order to form a correct estimate of their merits, we ought to place ourselves in their situation, to put out of our minds, for a time, all that knowledge which they could not have and we could not help having. . . .

"It is too much that the benefactors of mankind, after having been reviled by the dunces of their generation for going too far, should be reviled by the dunces of the next generation for not going far enough."

Representative Bill Frenzel of Minnesota made the same point in House debate: "What a funny way to ask us to rub ashes on our heads! The bill asks us to purge ourselves of someone else's guilt with another generation's money." No penance, no payments and no apology are required. The past is past. Let it stay that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of H.R. 442, Calendar Order No. 323, the House companion measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 442) to implement recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed immediately to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause of H.R. 442, and to substitute therefore the text of S. 1009, as reported and as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Hawaii.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? There being no further debate, the question is, Shall the bill pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this will be the last rollcall vote today. I am sure there are some Senators who have probably left the floor and may not realize that the final passage is about to occur. I know of one Senator who is trying hard to get to the Senate floor who missed the last vote. This will be the last rollcall vote of the day. I ask unanimous consent that the time on this vote be 20 minutes and that the call for the regular order then be automatic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] is absent because of illness.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] would vote "yea."

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATSUNAGA). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 69, nays 27, as follows:

So the bill (H.R. 442) as amended, was passed, as follows:

H.R. 442

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives (H.R. 442) entitled "An Act to implement recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians", do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SECTION 1. (a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the findings of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, established by the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians Act, accurately and completely describe the circumstances of the exclusion, relocation, and internment of in excess of one hundred and ten thousand United States citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry and the treatment of the individuals of Aleut ancestry who were removed from the Aleutian and the Pribilof Islands;

(2) the internment of individuals of Japanese ancestry was carried out without any documented acts of espionage or sabotage, or other acts of disloyalty by any citizens or permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry on the west coast;

(3) there was no military or security reason for the internment;

(4) the internment of the individuals of Japanese ancestry was caused by racial prejudice, war hysteria, and a failure of political leadership;

(5) the excluded individuals of Japanese ancestry suffered enormous damages and losses, both material and intangible, and there were incalculable losses in education and job training, all of which resulted in significant human suffering;

(6) the basic civil liberties and constitutional rights of those individuals of Japanese ancestry interned were fundamentally violated by that evacuation and internment;

(7) as documented in the Commission's reports, the Aleut civilian residents of the Pribilof Islands and the Aleutian Islands west of Unimak Island were relocated during World War II to temporary camps in isolated regions of southeast Alaska where they remained, under United States control and in the care of the United States, until long after any potential danger to their home villages had passed;

(8) the United States failed to provide reasonable care for the Aleuts, and this resulted in widespread illness, disease, and death among the residents of the camps; and the United States further failed to protect Aleut personal and community property while such property was in its possession or under its control;

(9) the United States has not compensated the Aleuts adequately for the conversion or destruction of personal property caused by the United States military occupation of Aleut villages during World War II; and

(10) there is no remedy for injustices suffered by the Aleuts during World War II except an Act of Congress providing appropriate compensation for those losses which are attributable to the conduct of United States forces and other officials and employees of the United States.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) acknowledge the fundamental injustice of the evacuation, relocation, and internment of United States citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry;

(2) apologize on behalf of the people of the United States for the evacuation, relocation, and internment of the citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry;

(3) provide for a public education fund to finance efforts to inform the public about the internment of such individuals so as to prevent the reoccurrence of any similar event;

(4) make restitution to those individuals of Japanese ancestry who were interned; and

(5) make restitution to Aleut residents of the Pribilof Islands and the Aleutian Islands west of Unimak Island, in settlement of United States obligations in equity and at law, for—

(A) injustices suffered and unreasonable hardships endured while under United States control during World War II;

(B) personal property taken or destroyed by United States forces during World War II;

(C) community property, including community church property, taken or destroyed by United States forces during World War II; and

(D) traditional village lands on Attu Island not rehabilitated after World War II for Aleut occupation or other productive use.

TITLE I—RECOGNITION OF INJUSTICE AND APOLOGY ON BEHALF OF THE NATION

SEC. 101. The Congress accepts the findings of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians and recognizes that a grave injustice was done to both citizens and resident aliens of Japanese ancestry by the evacuation, relocation, and internment of civilians during World War II. On behalf of the Nation, the Congress apologizes.

The Attorney General shall, subject to the availability of monies appropriated for such purpose, encourage each eligible individual to submit his or her current address to the Department of Justice through a public awareness campaign.

(2) If an eligible individual refuses to accept any payment under this section, such amount shall remain in the Fund and no payment shall be made under this section to such individual at any future date.

(b) PREFERENCE TO OLDEST.—The Attorney General shall endeavor to make payment to eligible individuals who are living in the order of date of birth (with the oldest receiving full payment first), until all eligible individuals who are living have received payment in full.

The Secretary may appoint the Association as Administrator if such agreement is reached within 90 days after the date of enactment of this title. If no agreement is reached within such period, the Secretary shall appoint another person as Administrator under this title, after consultation with affected Aleut village leaders and the Corporation.

Such trust shall be established pursuant to the laws of the State of Alaska, and shall be maintained and operated by not more than seven trustees, as designated by the Secretary. Each affected Aleut village may submit to the Administrator a list of three prospective trustees. The Secretary, after consultation with the Administrator, affected Aleut villages, and the Corporation, shall designate not more than seven trustees from such lists as submitted.

(2) The trustees shall maintain and operate the trust as eight independent and separate accounts, including—

(C) one account for the independent benefit of those Aleuts who, as determined by the Secretary, upon the advice of the trustees, are deserving but will not benefit directly from the accounts established pursuant to subparagraphs (A) and (B).

The trustees shall credit to the account described in subparagraph (C) an amount equal to 5 per centum of the principal amount credited by the Secretary to the trust. The remaining principal amount shall be divided among the accounts described in subparagraphs (A) and (B), in proportion to the June 1, 1942 Aleut civilian population of the village for which each such account is established, as compared to the total civilian Aleut population on such date of all affected Aleut villages.

(3) The trust established by this subsection shall be administered in a manner that is consistent with the laws of the State of Alaska, and as prescribed by the Secretary, after consultation with representative eligible Aleuts, the residents of affected Aleut villages, and the Administrator. Within 1 year after the date of enactment of this title, the Administrator shall submit such inventory and assessment, together with an estimate of the present replacement value of lost or destroyed furnishings and artifacts, to the Secretary.

(2) The Secretary shall review the inventory and assessment provided pursuant to paragraph (1), and shall make payment to the trust established pursuant to subsection (b) in an amount reasonably calculated by the Secretary to compensate affected Aleut villages for church property lost, damaged, or destroyed during World War II.

The Secretary shall pay, subject to the availability of monies appropriated to the Fund for such payments, to each eligible Aleut the sum of $12,000.

(2) The Secretary may request, and upon such request, the Attorney General shall provide, reasonable assistance in locating eligible Aleuts residing outside the affected Aleut villages. (b) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Fund such sums as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

ATTU ISLAND RESTITUTION PROGRAM

SEC. 307. (a) WILDERNESS DESIGNATION.—In accordance with subsection (3)(c) of the Wilderness Act (78 Stat. 892), the public lands on Attu Island, Alaska, within the National Wildlife Refuge System are designated as wilderness by section 702(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (94 Stat. 2417). In order to make restitution for the loss of traditional Aleut lands and village properties on Attu Island lands, while preserving the present designation of Attu Island lands as part of the National Wilderness Preservation System, compensation to the Aleut people in lieu of Attu Island conveyance shall be provided in accordance with this section.

(b) ACREAGE DETERMINATION.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary shall determine the total acreage of land on Attu Island, Alaska, that was subject to traditional use by the Aleut villagers of that island for subsistence and other purposes. In making such acreage determination, the Secretary shall establish a base acreage of not less than 35,000 acres within that part of eastern Attu Island traditionally used by the Aleut people, and shall further, from the best available information, including information that may be submitted by representatives of the Aleut people, identify any such additional acreage on Attu Island that was subject to such use. The combination of base acreage and such additional acreage shall constitute the aggregate acreage determination, and shall be the basis for compensation to the Corporation pursuant to this section. The Secretary shall promptly notify the Corporation of the results of the aggregate acreage determination made pursuant to this subsection.

(c) VALUATION.—(1) Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary shall determine the value of the aggregate Attu Island acreage determination, made pursuant to subsection (b), except that—

(A) no tract of acreage within such determination shall be valued at less than $350 per acre nor more than $500 per acre; and

(B) the total valuation of all acreage within such determination shall not exceed $15,000,000.

(2) In making the valuation pursuant to paragraph (1), the Secretary shall take into consideration such factors as the Secretary considers appropriate, including—

(A) fair market value;

(B) environmental and public interest value; and

(C) established precedents for valuation of comparable wilderness lands in the State of Alaska.

(3) The Secretary shall promptly notify the Corporation of the valuation made pursuant to this subsection, and such valuation shall constitute a final determination of compensation unless appealed within 30 days by the Corporation. If such appeal is made, the Secretary shall within 30 days review the valuation in light of the appeal, and issue immediately thereafter a final determination of the total value of that acreage determined to be subject to traditional use pursuant to subsection (b). Such final determination shall constitute the amount payable as compensation to the Corporation for the Aleuts' loss of ownership of Attu Island.

(d) IN LIEU COMPENSATION PAYMENT.—The Secretary shall pay, subject to the availability of monies appropriated for this purpose, the full amount of compensation, as determined pursuant to subsection (c), to the Corporation in lieu of any conveyance of Attu Island as recommended by the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians.

(e) VILLAGE SITE CONVEYANCE.—The Secretary of the Interior may convey to the Corporation all right, title, and interest of the United States to the surface estate of the traditional Aleut village site on Attu Island, Alaska (consisting of approximately 10 acres) and to the surface estate of a parcel of land consisting of all land outside such village that is within 660 feet of any point on the boundary of such village. The conveyance may be made pursuant to the authority provided by section 14(h)(1) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1613(h)(1)), except that following the date of enactment of this section, no site on Attu Island, Alaska, other than such traditional Aleut village site and such parcel of land, shall be conveyed to the Corporation pursuant to such section 14(h)(1).

(f) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated $15,000,000 to the Secretary for purposes of carrying out the provisions of this section.

COMPLIANCE WITH BUDGET ACT

SEC. 308. (a) No authority under this title to enter into contracts or to make payments shall be effective in any fiscal year except to such extent and in such amounts as provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

(b) In any fiscal year—

(1) the Secretary, with respect to the Fund set forth pursuant to section 303; and

(2) the Secretary with respect to the trust set forth pursuant to section 305, and with respect to the provisions of sections 306 and 307, shall limit the total benefits conferred to an amount not in excess of the appropriations for such fiscal year, and if the requirements exceed the limitations set in this section, the benefits shall be reduced to the extent necessary to comply with the provisions of this section.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 309. If any provision of this title, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances, shall be held invalid, the remainder of this title or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

TITLE IV—TERRITORY OR PROPERTY CLAIMS AGAINST UNITED STATES

SEC. 401. Notwithstanding any other provision of law or of this Act, nothing in this Act shall be construed as recognition of any claim of Mexico or any other country or any Indian tribe (except as expressly provided in this Act with respect to the Aleut tribe of Alaska) to any territory or other property of the United States, nor shall it be construed as providing any basis for compensation in connection with any such claim.

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the Hollings amendment, No. 1957, to the Gramm motion to recommit with instructions S.J. Res. 282, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to contributions and expenditures intended to affect congressional and Presidential contributions.

Senators Ernest F. Hollings, Terry Sanford, Dennis DeConcini, Brock Adams, Spark Matsunaga, Bob Graham, Lawton, Chiles, J.J. Exon, Paul Simon, Wyche Fowler, Jr., Barbara A. Mikulski, Tom Daschle, Claiborne Pell, David L. Boren, Jay Rockefeller, Dale Bumpers, Don Riegle, Alan Cranston, John Melcher, and Robert C. Byrd.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FORD). Who seeks recognition?

Mr. HOLLINGS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer.

Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader for his assistance and guidance in this particular respect. I think, however, that even without an order we can make an agreement tomorrow. I will leave that to the two leaders. Suffice it to say, we are ready to continue the debate on S. 282, to emphasize the fact that this constitutional amendment will in no way inhibit the first amendment rights of freedom of speech. On the contrary, our thrust here is to expand and bolster and enhance the freedom of speech which has been eroded by the Buckley decision, which erroneously equated speech with money, thereby effectively depriving cash-poor candidates of true freedom of speech in campaigns.

Crassly put, if I have $1 million and my opponent has $10,000, I can run attack ads in the media—negative ads—and my opponent will not be able to afford the expense of responding in ads of his own. He will veritably have his freedom of speech removed. I am trying to repair this injustice, to return to a more level playing field for wealthy and nonwealthy candidates alike.

Basically, limits on campaign financing affect only the amplification of an individual's message. Everyone has the same, equal freedom of speech today. No one is going to take it away from anyone, not in this country, not under the first amendment.

I would cite our distinguished colleague from Wisconsin, Senator PROXMIRE, who without the benefit of amplification, relying strictly on his diligence, spends less than $1,000. Yet he has been elected and reelected to the Senate many times.

I think the basic mistake of the Court in the Buckley decision was just this, that it equated free speech with money. Its further mistake was to say that those who contribute can have their freedom of speech controlled but those who receive contributions cannot have their freedom of speech controlled.

Others are waiting to take the floor. I just want to thank the distinguished majority leader, and I will eagerly await tomorrow's debate.

Mr. BYRD. Yes. Mr. President, may I inquire of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Mr. HOLLINGS, as to what time he would like to resume consideration of this resolution on tomorrow?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Early in the day. I think for the convenience of all, whatever is the pleasure of the majority leader.

Mr. BYRD. Very well. I thank the Senator.

RURAL LETTER CARRIERS AUTOMOBILE EXPENSE ACT

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, today I would like to call the attention of the Senate to the people who literally carry the burden of keeping the United States united.

I am referring to our rural letter carriers—the men and women who carry news of the world down isolated country roads, and who do us a daily service by keeping us connected with our most remote constituents.

Although we may take it for granted that we can send a letter to relatives in places such as Snow Hill, NC, and find a response in our mail boxes a few days later, it is too easy to forget that those letters were carried over hundreds of miles by many hard-working postal workers.

It is a disservice to these rural mail carriers that, under the current tax code, they are in effect paying out of their own pockets to deliver our mail. One of my constituents from South Mills, NC, is a case in point.

As a rural mail carrier, he is reimbursed only 20 cents per mile for vehicle operating costs, while it actually costs him 30 cents per mile to use his specially equipped, right-sided driver car to deliver the mail. Twenty cents per mile might cover the costs of driving a car on the highway, but these rural letter carriers must stop and start every several hundred yards or so, resulting in lower miles per gallon and higher wear and tear on the automobile.

I am proud to be a cosponsor of S. 1340, the Rural Letter Carriers Automobile Expense Act. This bill would give rural letter carriers a just tax deduction which equalizes the amount rural mail carriers pay out and are reimbursed for mileage. Through this bill, we can let our postal workers know how much America depends on their service, and that we recognize their vital role in keeping the 50 States together.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMISSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to confirm that pursuant to Public Law 100-203, I have appointed the honorable PETE DOMENICI, (R., N.M.) and Mr. Dean Kleckner, to be members of the National Economic Commission.

BICENTENNIAL MINUTE

APRIL 8, 1913: WOODROW WILSON BREAKS A TRADITION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, these days Members of Congress expect as a matter of course that the President of the United States will travel to Capitol Hill near the beginning of each session to deliver this State of the Union Message. After all, the Constitution mandates such regular reporting from the chief executive. But in fact, for more than half of our history, Presidents did not appear in person. It was just 75 years ago this month, on April 8, 1913, that President Woodrow Wilson broke the 113-year-old tradition of written messages.

Presidents George Washington and John Adams did deliver their annual messages in person. But Thomas Jefferson discontinued the practice. Most likely, Jefferson acted out of both philosophical and personal considerations. As a staunch Republican, he disliked all trappings of monarchy, and for him, the annual appearance of the President in Congress too closely resembled the King's annual message to Parliament. Nor did Jefferson, who lisped slightly, and spoke softly, particularly enjoy making public addresses. He preferred to send his messages to Congress and have them read by a clerk. Each of Jefferson's successors throughout the 19th century followed his precedent.

Both Woodrow Wilson was a different breed. Although philosophically an admirer of Jefferson, Wilson nevertheless believed that Presidents should take an active role in promoting their legislative proposals in Congress. In his many writings on American history and politics, he envisioned a role for the President closer to that of the British Prime Minister, and his election to the presidency gave him the opportunity to put his theories into practice. So on April 8, 1913, Wilson stunned Congress by appearing in person at a joint session to deliver his message—as has each of Wilson's successors.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Ms. Emery, one of his secretaries.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE KINGDOM OF THE NETHERLANDS ON SOCIAL SECURITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 132

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to Section 233(e)(1) of the Social Security Act, as amended by the Social Security Amendments of 1977 (P.L. 95-216, 42 U.S.C. 433(e)(1)), I transmit herewith the Agreement between the United States of America and the Kingdom of the Netherlands on Social Security that consists of two separate instruments: A principal agreement and an administrative arrangement. The Agreement was signed at The Hague on December 8, 1987.

The U.S.-Netherlands Agreement is similar in objective to the social security agreements already in force with Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom. Such bilateral agreements provide for limited coordination between the United States and foreign social security systems to overcome the problems of gaps in protection and of dual coverage and taxation for workers who move from one country to the other.

I also transmit for the information of the Congress a comprehensive report prepared by the Department of Health and Human Services, which explains the provisions of the Agreement and provides data on the number of persons affected by the Agreement and the effect on social security financing as required by the same provision of the Social Security Act.

The Department of State and the Department of Health and Human Services join with me in commending the U.S.-Netherlands Social Security Agreement and related documents.

RONALD REAGAN.

FOREIGN ANTI-DRUG CORRUPTION ACT

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today aimed at wiping out one of the crucial building blocks of the international drug trade—the corruption of public officials in foreign lands.

Today, international drug lords reign over a ruthless empire, built on the pillars of bribery, greed, and corruption. All too often, free-flowing cash ensures that foreign law enforcement officials ignore the illicit production and distribution of drugs, and the laundering of drug-related profits. All too often, law enforcement officials become paid accomplices of drug runners. In Colombia last year, for example, one of that country's biggest drug kingpins simply bought his way out of prison.

This cannot continue. We cannot win the war on drugs when the very people who should be enforcing anti-drug laws are being bribed to ignore them.

Mr. President, my bill attacks this problem by prohibiting foreign assistance to those nations who refuse to prevent and punish acts of bribery or other forms of corruption that are drug-related.

Drug-related corruption must be stopped. It must be punished. But too many nation's aren't willing to do so. And unfortunately, our own government is too willing to certify those countries as "cooperating fully," despite their refusal to vigorously punish corrupt officials. Indeed, the administration this year certified two governments—Mexico and the Bahamas—which it admits have done little or nothing to combat drug-related corruption.

The State Department's Narcotics Control Strategy Report notes:

> Documented violations by Mexican law enforcement officials are becoming more prevalent.

It states further that:

> Official protection of narcotics activities ranges from simply looking the other way to facilitating safe passage of drugs through customs or military/police checkpoints.

Mexico failed to combat this corruption. Still, the President certified Mexico as cooperating fully.

In the Bahamas, a similar situation prevails. The story of the Bahamas during 1987 was one of drug laws unenforced and corruption unpunished. A few of those "on the take" have been fired or forced to retire. But they are not charged. They are not tried. They are not convicted and punished for their wrongdoing.

Again, the State Department reports:

> Narcotics-related corruption continued to be a serious concern in 1987, with few investigations or prosecutions of corrupt officials taking place.

The Bahamas failed to combat this corruption. Still, the President certified the Bahamas as cooperating fully.

Mr. President, perhaps the worst example lies in Panama, and the corruption-ridden regime of General Noriega.

One year ago, the President certified that the Government of Panama had cooperated fully in the war on drugs during the preceding year. He did so despite ample evidence that Panama was the money laundering capital of this hemisphere. He did so despite the fact that Panama was a major point for transshipment of drugs and precursor chemicals. And he did so despite evidence that the Panamanian leader, Noriega, was an accomplice in these crimes.

Less than 1 year later, Noriega was indicted by a Federal grand jury in Florida on charges of drug trafficking and drug money laundering.

One more, the President in 1987 had certified as "cooperating fully" a government that failed to punish drug-related corruption.

This cycle must end. The drug lords have opened a new front in the narcotics war. Not content with buying and selling drugs, they have increasingly sought to buy and sell those who should be enforcing drug laws.

Thankfully, most resist. In every drug source country, brave men and women fight the drug war every day; brave men and women resist the bribes and other temptations the drug lords offer.

But when a public official succumbs, when he takes a bribe from a drug trafficker, then we have a right to expect that he will be punished. And, if not, then the United States should suspend foreign aid to any government that fails to prevent and punish drug-related corruption.

Mr. President, no government which tolerates corruption can effectively wage war on drugs. One cannot lock the jail cell of a drug lord with one hand, while accepting bribes from him with the other.

To win the war on drugs, we must fight drug-related corruption. This bill will help us do that, and I urge my colleagues to join me as a cosponsor.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I want to first pay my thanks to the Senator from Virginia for not only this bill but his leadership in this area. He has worked with many Members here and has taken a real leadership role in trying to educate people about the problems of drugs. He has worked on a totally bipartisan basis because there is no politics in drug enforcement. And the bill that he has offered has stiffer sanctions and stiff notice. I think it is a tremendous movement in the right direction. I compliment my good friend from Virginia.

AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY-BASED PLASTICS DEVELOPMENT ACT

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I come before the Senate today to introduce the Agricultural Commodity-Based Plastics Development Act of 1988. This measure is an important step toward developing markets for new, nonfood, uses of our Nation's agricultural commodities.

Mr. President, before I proceed I would like to take a few moments to recognize and compliment several of my colleagues who have also been in the forefront of efforts to create new nonfood uses for farm products. Specifically Senator LUGAR, who joined me in introducing legislation to promote research into new nonfood uses, and Senator HARKIN who has introduced legislation to promote research into the modification of plants to develop new nonfood products. Senators CONRAD and LEAHY have also been very active in this important issue for American agriculture.

Mr. President, the legislation that I am introducing today addresses two important issues. Namely, the return to health and prosperity of our Nation's agriculture, and the serious environmental problem we face regarding the disposal of plastic waste.

Farm prosperity occurs when demand for commodities is in balance with the available supply. This was true during the 1970's, when an expanding export market readily consumed the increasing supply of commodities produced by American agriculture.

During the 1980's, increased competition abroad has led to zero growth in U.S. agriculture. Foreign competitors have increased their agricultural production resulting in an erosion of our international agricultural market share, and excess capacity in U.S. crop production. Unfortunately, there are many indications that these trends will continue.

Clearly Mr. President, a key step in restoring prosperity to American agriculture is through the development of new nonfood uses for agricultural commodities. It is unlikely that our export market will grow as in the 1970's and consume our excess capacity. Rather, we must harness our own inventiveness to create new opportunities for American agriculture both here and aboard.

The technology exists today to produce agriculture commodity based plastic products which degrade when disposed of in the environment. These are made by combining starch with conventional plastic resins. The starch used in this process is made from a natural resource that is in great abundance in this country, corn and other grains. A wide variety of items can be produced using these techniques, including plastic packaging, plastic bags, agricultural mulch, milk jugs, dairy tubs, meat trays, diaper liners, fast food containers, industrial containers, and pharmaceutical packaging. Using durable injection molding techniques, such diverse products as children's toys, office supplies, and automobile components are also feasible. When disposed of in an ecologically active environment, such as a landfill, microbes consume the starch, permiting the item to degrade. It has been estimated that corn starch-based plastics could replace 30 to 45 percent of the low-density polyethylene plastics used each year, producing an additional market for approximately 112 million bushels of corn per year.

Mr. President, the widespread introduction of this technology would benefit the American farmer, whose agricultural commodities are used to produce it. Agricultural commodity-based degradable plastics also address another problem which faces our Nation, that of solid waste disposal.

More than one-half of the cities in the United States will exhaust their current landfill capacity by 1990. The management of this growing volume of solid waste is one of the most urgent and fundamental environmental problems facing Federal, State, and local officials. Plastics comprise 7 percent of the 150 million tons of solid waste produced in this country each year. By the year 2000, this is expected to rise to 10 percent. Clearly, there is no single answer to the problems of our rapidly filling landfills. Indeed, a solution must involve a number of initiatives, including recycling, new incineration technologies, and modifying our use and disposal of solid waste. An important component of this will be the increased use of degradable plastic products.

Mr. President, this legislation will provide incentives for further private sector market development of this technology through the preferential procurement of degradable plastics products by the Federal Government. Special emphasis will be placed on agricultural commodity-based technologies. It directs the General Services Administration to identify, and make available to it's Government customers, degradable plastics products; $20 million is authorized for each of 3 years to cover the additional cost of procuring these items. It also establishes an interagency working group to develop and coordinate the implementation of the act.

New nonfood uses for our agricultural commodities are not futuristic fantasies requiring years to develop. Today corn starch is used in the manufacture of paper products, building materials, textiles, and adhesives. Three to five billion pounds of U.S. produced fats and oils are used in nonfood products each year. But this is not enough. We must continue to aggressively pursue new markets and to develop new uses for our farm products. For this reason, this bill will direct the Secretary of Agriculture to annually report to Congress the progress made in research into nonfood uses of agricultural commodities.

I want to emphasize that the problems facing American agriculture and the disposal of municipal waste are complex. They will not be solved quickly, rather they require a forward-looking strategy to help return our agricultural communities to prosperity and to address this very serious environmental concern facing our Nation's cities. I believe that the legislation that I am proposing today is a part of that solution.

Mr. President, as I mentioned earlier, some of my colleagues are also concerned with these problems and have introduced similar initiatives which recognize the benefits of developing new nonfood uses for agricultural commodities. I look forward to their support and urge my colleagues to cosponsor this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2298

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Agricultural Commodity-Based Plastics Development Act of 1988".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the achievement of long-term health for the agriculture sector of the United States is essential to the vitality of the national economy, the well-being of our citizens and rural communities, and the maintenance of national security;

(2) the development of new non-food uses for agricultural commodities will reduce crop surpluses, raise farm income, and lower the cost of agricultural subsidies provided by the Federal government;

(3) the economic security of the United States requires that the Federal government should promote the development and use of products derived from agricultural commodities through the preferential procurement of such products to reach a threshold level of commercial application at which such products can successfully compete;

(4) more than ½ of the cities in the United States will exhaust their current landfill capacity by 1990, and the management of this growing volume of solid waste is one of the most urgent and fundamental environmental problems facing Federal, State, and local officials;

(5) plastic products comprise a significant amount of the 150,000,000 tons of solid waste produced in the United States and the use of degradable plastics products made from agricultural commodities can provide a positive impact in solving the problem of solid waste disposal;

(6) the technology exists to develop and market degradable agricultural commodity-based plastics for use in packaging, agricultural mulching, and in other applications;

(7) the widespread introduction of the technology referred to in paragraph (6) into the commercial marketplace will provide a new outlet for United States agricultural products;

(8) the use of domestically produced agricultural commodity-based degradable plastics products will reduce the reliance of the United States on imported oil and result in an improved trade balance for the United States and increased employment opportunities for our citizens; and

(9) the Federal government should assist in bringing agricultural commodity-based degradable plastics to a level of commercial application comparable to other alternative products and should provide incentives for the development and adoption of such products.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to provide—

(1) that the Federal Government shall—

(A) promote the continued development of degradable plastics technology by increasing the purchases of degradable plastics products, with special emphasis on agricultural commodity-based products;

(B) assist State and local entities in purchasing degradable plastics products;

(C) provide incentives for further technology development through the preferential procurement of degradable plastics products, with special emphasis on agricultural commodity-based technologies;

(D) promote the manufacture and purchase of degradable plastics products by assisting producers in demonstrating the capability of this technology;

(E) increase the commercial availability of agricultural commodity-based degradable plastics products;

(F) support existing Federal, State, local, and privately sponsored degradable plastics programs; and

(G) be provided with advice concerning the status of research in new non-food uses for agricultural commodities; and

(2) for the establishment of an interagency working group to develop and coordinate the implementation of this Act.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act:

(1) AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY-BASED PLASTICS.—The term "agricultural commodity-based plastics" means plastic products that use agricultural commodity products as a constituent component.

(2) DEGRADABLE.—The term "degradable" means the biologically or light induced loss of utilitarian or physical characteristics of a plastic or hybrid material containing plastics as a major component.

By Mr. LEAHY:

S. 2299. A bill to eliminate the exemption for Congress from the application of certain provisions of Federal law relating to employment, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FAIR EMPLOYMENT IN CONGRESS ACT

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate approved the Integrity in Post Employment Act, a bill that amends the Ethics in Government Act by prohibiting former Members of Congress and some former high ranking officials from lobbying immediately after they leave office.

One issue that was not in dispute during the debate on the bill is that Congress needs to close the loopholes that allow "influence peddling" by former government officials, impugn governmental integrity, and erode public trust.

When the people of this country believe that good government has given way to greed, our democracy shakes at its foundation. Congress must have the courage to "clean house" if we are to regain the American people's confidence.

After studying this legislation in the Judiciary Committee over the last two Congresses, I concluded that this bill provides a constitutional way to prevent abuse of the public trust, and I supported its passage.

The debate on this legislation reminded me of another step that Congress should take to instill confidence in our own branch of government. For decades, Congress has exempted itself from important civil rights and labor laws, including the Civil Service Reform Act, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, the Equal Pay Act, and the Occupational Safety and Health Act.

These laws apply to employers in this country—except Congress. Taken together, they spell out civil, social, physical and economic working rights and standards for American workers—except if they work for Congress. It is a sad reality that the men and women who serve us every day here on Capitol Hill do not enjoy the rights and protections of other workers.

This double standard is a plain injustice to those who make our work possible. It is an embarrassment to us all.

Some of my colleagues may remember that in four previous Congresses I introduced the Fair Employment in Congress Act. The purpose of the legislation is simple—to end this injustice by removing the congressional exemption from each of these laws.

The legislation was not met with great enthusiasm. I recall when I first introduced the bill 10 years ago, I gave what I thought was a stirring speech on this floor. When I finished explaining exactly what the legislation would do, a senior Member came up to me and asked me where I was going. I said I was hurrying to catch a plane to Vermont, and he said, "Good, stay there."

That remark, however intimidating, did not stop me. I came back and I introduced the bill three more times. Hearings were held in the Governmental Affairs Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management in the 96th Congress. The legislation was redrafted and improved.

Although the Senate never took action on this legislation, I have not lost sight of its rightness and the need for it. As we all know in the Senate, timing is crucial in the legislative process. It can take years to see a bill become law. I believe that now is the time to reintroduce the Fair Employment in Congress Act.

The bill the Senate passed yesterday provides a good opportunity to raise this issue. And it was less than a month ago that the House and Senate voted to override the President's veto of the Civil Rights Restoration Act, bringing to a close the long and often rancorous fight to restore Federal protection against discrimination in the wake of the Supreme Court's Grove City decision.

I hope that my colleagues—so many in number—who joined in overriding the veto of the Civil Rights Restoration Act will agree to work with me to right the injustice of the congressional double standard.

Removing the congressional exemption from the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1972, would make Congress subject to the same restrictions in employment discrimination that apply to the rest of the country.

The Civil Service Reform Act was a historic step forward for Federal workers who can now organize, bargain with management, complain about unfair labor practices, and seek fair settlement of grievances. But that is not the case on Capitol Hill where recent news stories uncovered the "Dickensian" working conditions of employees in the House folding room. This intolerable situation prompted quick action by two House committees, but I do not think we should wait until something like this happens before we act. Congressional workers deserve better protections.

They deserve a safe and health work environment. The Occupational Safety and Health Act is an example of the kind of laws that should apply to all working Americans. There is no reason why we should not live by the same safety standards we set for the rest of the country.

Subjecting Congress to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Equal Pay Act would ensure that the House folding room workers receive deserved overtime pay for 70-hour weeks, and give legal standing to women who still do not receive equal pay for equal work.

The Age Discrimination in Employment Act speaks to a bias that has no place in a nation where young and old need each other in the workplace, where innovation and experience are both needed for productivity. Why not apply this formula to all of Congress?

The bill I introduce today focuses solely on the pressing need to bring congressional workers under the protections of employment laws. After addressing the civil, physical, and economic working rights of our workers, we can get to work on other issues that need our attention including the Privacy Act and the Freedom of Information Act.

Over the years that I have advocated passage of the Fair Employment in Congress Act, Senators have stressed the special nature of the legislative process and the independence of our branch of government. The concern raised is that Senators and Congressmen require an unrestricted choice of staff because of the absolutely confidential relationship between a Member and his or her advisers. To impose a set of outside standards on that right of choice would limit the exercise of conscience that is the first duty of any Member.

I understand the need to protect the confidentiality that we all rely on in carrying out our legislative duties. But I cannot see why folding room workers should not be able to organize like other Federal workers, just because it might not be appropriate for legislative assistants to do so.

On the other hand, neither folding room workers nor legislative assistants should work in unhealthy or unsafe conditions.

Congress should not enjoy a blanket exemption from the laws we have applied to others in this Nation. I believe most Americans agree with that principle—the fundamental principle behind this bill. It is time for us to discuss and debate this issue, and to consider the concerns of those who believe that Congress would be weakened if we applied to it these employment discrimination laws. But we cannot let the congressional exemption go unchallenged.

Examination of the special nature and requirements of the legislative process in relation to the need to grant protections to congressional employees may lead to revision of this legislation. It may be that our discussion and debate will lead us to a proposal that at least gets us on the road to protecting some Capitol Hill workers. I know that the minimum wage bill reported earlier this year by the House Committee on Education and Labor brings many Federal legislative branch workers under the protection of the Fair Labor Standards Act. The bill also provides that enforcement of the law be carried out by the House and Senate through internal rules and procedures.

This effort adds a constructive element to the discussion on eliminating the congressional double standard. I am hopeful that the discussion will continue and that we can hold hearings on my bill.

Consideration of the reforms set out in the Fair Employment in Congress Act is long overdue.

To do nothing, to allow this injustice and embarrassment to stand without exploring ways to right it is not befitting the Congress of the United States.

By Mr. EVANS (for himself and Mr. ADAMS):

S. 2300. A bill to issue a fisheries license for the operation of the vessel MV Ocean Cyclone; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

FISHERIES LICENSE FOR VESSEL MV "OCEAN CYCLONE"

● Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a piece of legislation that would grant a waiver for the operation of the vessel MV Ocean Cyclone. I am pleased to be joined by my colleague from Washington State, Senator ADAMS, in this effort which will benefit the fishing industry, and could aid in reducing the foreign trade deficit.

Charles E. Yates, of Crystal Fisheries, Inc., has asked for assistance in obtaining a legislative waiver of a restriction on a vessel so that it can participate in some aspects of the U.S. fisheries. The waiver would allow this vessel to acquire, purchase, process, and transport fish products. It would not allow this vessel to actually catch fish and there is no desire to use the vessel for that purpose.

Crystal Fisheries, Inc., is a company that manages U.S. trawlers operating in the Bering Sea and Eastern Pacific in a "joint venture" with foreign processing motherships. These joint ventures are being phased out as U.S. processing capacity increases. The joint venture fishery is rapidly being replaced by U.S. catcher/processor vessels. In order for members of the joint venture fleet to survive, it is imperative that processing ships be available to accept the product that those vessels are capable of catching. Such motherships must be U.S.-built under the Commercial Fishing Industry Vessel Anti-Reflagging Act of 1987.

In order to create a "mothership processor" it is necessary to have a U.S.-built hull of sufficient size to hold the equipment necessary to process large volumes of fish and to house the large number of people required for the handling of these fish. A number of vessels have been sold from the United States surplus fleet that meet the size requirement for these motherships. Mr. Yates has identified one of these vessels, the M.V. Ocean Cyclone [ex Coastal Spartan], as being suitable for this purpose, and he has entered into a contract for the purchase of this U.S.-built vessel with the intention of converting it into a processing ship.

However, when such vessels were sold out of the U.S. surplus fleet a contractual restriction was placed upon their use—prohibiting their being used or operated "as a means of transportation of passengers or cargo for hire, or as a means of transportation of proprietary cargo. * * *"

The Department of Transportation has interpreted this contractual restriction to preclude the utilization of these vessels in the U.S. fisheries in the manner which is now being proposed for their use. Because of this interpretation, Congress in 1980 adopted an act which provided a 2-year window for all of the owners of the surplus vessels to apply for permission to utilize these vessels in the U.S. fisheries. However, the owners of the vessel Mr. Yates has targeted failed to apply for this permission. For this reason, Mr.

Yates is now seeking assistance in correcting this oversight. In addition, Mr. Yates intends to receive fish from catcher vessels that are currently operating as joint venture catcher vessels within the 3-mile limit. The transport of those fish to a U.S. port would be "coastwise trade." The former ownership by a foreign company renders the vessel ineligible for such "coastwise trade" under the Jones Act. The proposed legislation therefore waives the application of the Jones Act for this purpose.

Once the vessel is acquired, and the proper authorization has been obtained, Crystal Fisheries will undertake its conversion in the United States at an estimated cost of between $8, and $11 million. When the conversion is completed, the ship will employ between 100 to 150 people full time. Additionally, the vessel will utilize between four and eight U.S. trawlers to provide it with the raw fish products necessary for the operation of the processing plant.

I understand that the joint venture "American High Seas Fisheries Association" has endorsed this proposal. They feel that in order for their members to survive in future fisheries off Alaska, it is imperative that U.S. processing ships be developed to accept the product which their vessels are capable of catching.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a text outlining the history of the vessel MV Ocean Cyclone be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HISTORY OF THE VESSEL MV "OCEAN CYCLONE"

The vessel M/V Ocean Cyclone (ex Coastal Spartan) is a Knot Class vessel built in the United States during World War II for the United States. Following the war she was mothballed until sold in June 1965 to Boston Metals Co. pursuant to Maritime Administration (MARAD) Contract M.A. 3915 (IFB PD-X-697). At the time of her sale she was contractually prohibited from being used as a means of transportation for passengers or cargo for hire, or as means of transportation of proprietary cargo.

After acquisition by Boston Metals Co. the vessel was then transferred to Storm Drilling Co. in February 1969 by Amendment No. to the MARAD contract.

In 1971, the vessel was converted into a Drill Ship by Bethlehem Steel in its Beaumont, TX, shipyard (Project No. 2811). At the time of conversion 10 ft. sponsons were added to each side and a midbody insert of approximately 40 ft. was added.

The vessel apparently served as a drilling platform off the southern coast of the United States until approximately May 1975 when ownership of the vessel was transferred to Japan Odeco S.A., a Panamanian corporation, pursuant to Amendment No. 2 of the MARAD contract. The vessel was then utilized as a drilling platform off the coast of Brazil until approximately 1985 when it was again mothballed.

In December 1987, Seafood Wholesales Inc., a California corporation, purchased the vessel from Japan Odeco. In February, 1988, Crystal Products Inc. (CPI) obtained a 120 day option to purchase the vessel from Seafood Wholesalers Inc.

CPI, if it obtains congressional permission, intends to utilize the vessel as a U.S. flag mothership processor in the Bering Sea and Eastern Pacific. The vessel will employ an estimated 150 people annually and will utilize between four and eight U.S. trawlers to provide it with the raw fish product necessary for the operation of the processing plant.

This mother ship will displace one or more foreign processors presently operating in the U.S. fishing zone. In addition to the employment of U.S. personnel, it is anticipated that this vessel may reduce the U.S. foreign trade deficit by a minimum of $25-35 million annually either through the displacement of foreign fish brought into the United States or through the sale of its product on the foreign market.

The vessel will require annual shipyard maintenance which will generally be spent in Seattle shipyards in an amount estimated at $500,000 to $750,000.

Wages and salaries of employees are estimated to total in excess of $5,000,000 a year. The value to the trawlers servicing the mothership is estimated to be in excess of $7,000,000.●

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

ALEX KORFF

THE 1988 JOHN F. KENNEDY VOLUNTEER OF THE YEAR FOR NORTH AFRICA, NEAR EAST, ASIA, AND PACIFIC REGIONS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, it is a rare occasion when one can pay tribute to another and show respect for dedication and service to those whose fortune has been characterized by suffering. I have that opportunity today.

Allow me to draw the Senate's attention to the efforts of one of my constituents whose selfless dedication to community service—especially when it concerns children—has been a lifelong commitment. Alex Korff, of New York City, was recently awarded the Peace Corps' most distinguished award, the 1988 John F. Kennedy Volunteer of the Year for North Africa, Near East, Asia, and Pacific Regions. His efforts to alleviate the malnutrition and deprivation of Iloilo City in the southwest portion of the Philippines' Panay Island have served children who represent 25 percent of the victims of second and third stage malnutrition.

As a rural health community development worker his work has benefited the children directly by bringing to fruition programs which rehabilitate these suffering children. It has been his responsibility to administer the Greg Lumogda Fund initiated by Peace Corps volunteers to address the special needs of children: malnourishment, TB, pneumonia, acute anemia, cholera, menengitis, and cancer.

Alex has developed and implemented a hospice for children unable to return to their homes due to financial and personal hardships. He involved himself, as is the want to do of a volunteer, with the day-to-day care of children ill with complicated disorders—children otherwise helpless.

Most impressive have been his efforts to establish a center for children with special needs as well as to integrate an income project for the mothers of these children in order to maintain their dignity and that of the facility.

Mr. Korff is not a 20- or 25-year-old volunteer but rather a man in his mid-50's, a former Salvatorian priest, a religious order dedicated to education, an educator and an activist. He joined the Peace Corps in 1985 and has been one of its crown's jewels. He reminds us of our common duty to those whose lives are not as filled with opportunity and to the ideal which President Kennedy embodied in the Corps' mandate in his 1961 inaugural address. His words were directed to us all:

> To those peoples in the huts and villages of half the globe struggling to break the bonds of mass misery, we pledge our best efforts to help them help themselves, for whatever period is required—not because the communists may be doing it, not because we seek their votes, but because it is right. If a free society cannot help the many who are poor, it cannot save the few who are rich.

Many have been made richer for Alex Korff's work and his dedication is, for all of us, a reflection of an American tradition; a tradition of volunteerism, which is itself celebrated this week.

I salute you, Mr. Korff, and call upon my colleagues in the Congress to join me in recognizing your humanitarian commitment to the children in pain and poverty in the barrios of Iloilo City, the Philippines.●

NORTHERN IRELAND: A CRISIS IN PUBLIC CONFIDENCE

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the Anglo-Irish Agreement of November 15, 1985, raised new hope for reduced tensions in Northern Ireland. Article 8 of the accord specifically addressed the importance of public confidence in the administration of justice. This was a particularly critical provision for the Catholic minority, who have been struggling to express their hope for a fair and peaceful settlement. Catholic hope and confidence has been dismal in the past.

Now, after more than 2 years under the 1985 accord, the environment is more desperate and discouraging. As stated in the Washington Post on March 26, "there is widespread consensus among politicians, churchmen, academics, and military officials that the Northern Ireland problem has rarely seemed more hopeless." This observation is supported by a recent poll in Fortnight, a respected Belfast political journal, which found that 81 percent of the Catholics polled believe that the Catholic community has not benefited from the accord.

The fear and distrust of the Catholic minority is reflected in their attitude toward the local police force, the Royal Ulster Constabulary [RUC]. This force is 90 percent Protestant, and has historic ties, the Catholics believe, with the Province's Protestant majority, including Protestant paramilitary forces such as the Ulster Defense Association [UDA]. To make matters worse, the UDA, as noted by the Chicago Tribune on February 15, "is believed to be responsible for more than 300 Catholic murders and has recently been caught smuggling guns into Northern Ireland." Just as the IRA should be condemned for violence and highly questionable tactics, so should the UDA. Just as the IRA is blamed for prolonging the civil unrest, so should the UDA. Catholics see an obvious and unfair double standard being applied.

The intent of article 8 of the accord was commendable. Unfortunately, it does not seem to be any longer. Instead of gaining confidence in the administration of justice, the Catholic minority has been shocked and shaken by recent actions of the British judiciary. These actions, as reported by the Christian Science Monitor on February 10, seem "almost calculated to destroy whatever confidence they—the Catholics—may have in British justice." British justice is a term that does not apply to Northern Ireland.

There have been a litany of decisions which destroy British credibility. The first decision was to refuse to prosecute RUC police officers for obstructing an investigation into the killing of six unarmed Catholics, even though the British attorney general admitted that there was sufficient evidence for prosecution. The second decision, which came only 2 days later, was to uphold convictions against the so-called Birmingham Six. These six individuals were accused of planting bombs in English pubs in 1974. The convictions were upheld in spite of significant questions that had been raised concerning previous evidence and testimony.

The implications of these two actions, particularly the suggestion that the RUC could act with impunity and without judicial oversight, has eroded public trust. The apparent dual standard seen in the two decisions has deeply undermined British and Irish efforts to convince the Catholics in Northern Ireland that they will receive fair and equal treatment before the law. There is no reason for Catholics to believe that things are changing in Northern Ireland.

The acts of terrorism and violence in Northern Ireland continue to dominate the news coverage. Both sides must strongly and resolutely condemn these acts. The violence in Gibraltar, the massacre in the cemetery in Milltown, the killing of two undercover police in the midst of a funeral procession, all demonstrate that the violence erupts from every corner. All of these incidents are tragic and contribute to a deteriorating situation in Northern Ireland.

In the midst of these terrible times, there are voices appealing for calm. Gerry Adams, a leader of the Sinn Fein, said that he did not believe in reprisals, and appealed for calm during the Milltown Cemetery attack. After the murder of the two British soldiers at the funeral procession on March 19, Rev. Tom Toner, a Catholic priest, appealed to Catholics "to pray for the souls of the dead soldiers and themselves."

Mr. President, the Anglo-Irish Accord of 1985 raised the hopes of many people in Ireland. These hopes have been shattered by the recent decisions by the British courts. The new expectations have been dimmed by bloodshed and terror. I would hope that Prime Minister Thatcher and Prime Minister Haughey could join these voices with a hopeful message reaffirming the principles of the 1985 accord. They should emphasize the provisions of article 8 that speak to the importance of public confidence in the administration of law. Right now the police and the courts, these bodies responsible for the administration of justice, are distrusted by the Catholics.

The danger now is that London and Dublin will grow further apart over Northern Ireland. The danger now is that violence will replace reason and dialog. The danger now is that despair will replace hope. This must be avoided. Only 2 months ago the United Kingdom's Foreign and Commonwealth Office issued a briefing paper which lauded the Anglo-Irish Agreement as an "important milestone which benefits both communities in Northern Ireland and poses no threat to either of them." The United Kingdom went on to say that both governments remain firmly committed to "enhance the climate for political development and intercommunal reconciliation." Action must support words.

There are many complex, longstanding and deep-seated reasons for the turmoil and strife in Northern Ireland. There has been a lack of consistency and fairness by the courts. There is a separate way of treatment the IRA and UDA. There is a huge disparity between Catholic and Protestant representation in the RUC. A renewed commitment by both London and Dublin to "the importance of public confidence in the administration of justice," as noted in article 8, is a small first step toward building renewed hope. If the Catholics continue to believe that the police and the courts are not part of a system of justice but instead represent corruption and oppression, there is little promise for peace. We need to focus more attention on this tragic situation in Northern Ireland.●

IMPLEMENTING THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, last Thursday the Senate Judiciary Committee gave its overwhelming approval to S. 1851, a bill that would make genocide a crime under U.S. law.

I applaud the committee for taking this action and I am hopeful that the Senate will move quickly to approve this bill in the next several weeks.

Congressional approval of legislation that would implement the provisions of the International Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Genocide is long overdue. In 1986, the Senate gave its advice and consent to the President to ratify the Genocide Convention. But 2 years have passed and the United States has still not become a formal signatory to the convention. The unfinished business that is hindering this final action is passage of S. 1851, the Genocide Convention Implementation Act.

This legislation enjoys wide support from groups including the American Jewish Committee, the Armenian Assembly of America, the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is, the Cambodians, Amnesty International, B'nai B'rith International, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith International, and the American Bar Association. The Justice Department and the Senate Department have also testified in support of the bill. With such overwhelming support, the burden is now with the Senate to take action.

In a few months, President Reagan and the Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev will meet to discuss the INF Treaty and other issues, including human rights. Our failure to become a signatory to the Genocide Convention has allowed the Soviets to distort America's human rights record and undermine our negotiating power through propaganda campaigns conducted in advance of important bilateral meetings. In recent testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, Ambassador Richard Schifter, Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, said that the "human rights violators have persistently levied unfair charges of hypocrisy or insincerity against the United States" for its failure to sign the Genocide Convention. "For our adversaries, and those that believe human rights are merely hollow words, S. 1851 will eliminate a criticism that is now used to deflect attention from legitimate concerns over their own human rights abuses," Schifter said.

Senate approval of S. 1851 would permanently take that topic off the Soviet agenda and would strengthen the human rights stance of the United States in its upcoming talks with the Soviets.

It is my hope that the Senate leadership will schedule early floor consideration of this bill. April is a significant month for two of the most prominent targets of genocide in this century—the Jews and the Armenians. April 14 is Yom HaShoah, Holocaust Remembrance Day, and April 24 is Armenian Martyrs' Day. Senate passage of S. 1851 before the close of the month would serve as a special tribute to the memory of the victims of those two tragic events in human history.

Although the Genocide Convention and this implementing legislation cannot correct the wrongs of the past, it can serve as a powerful tool to prevent the repetition of genocide in the future and to punish those who would attempt to commit such acts.

I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important legislation and in working for its speedy approval by the Senate and the House of Representatives.●

A SALUTE TO JOHN CAMPBELL

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I would like for you and my colleagues to join with me in saluting an outstanding coach.

John Campbell, track coach at Gary Roosevelt High School in Gary, IN, has guided his outstanding teams to a record 10 State championships.

On April 30, 1988, Gary Roosevelt High School will host their 15th Gary Roosevelt Track Invitational, which brings together the best teams in Indiana, and for the past few years, the East St. Louis Lincoln High School team that has won several Illinois State championships. John will use the invitational as a testing ground for a shot at his 11th State championship.

John Campbell, a native of South Carolina, has taught and coached at Gary Roosevelt High School for 30 years. He is married to Earline Campbell, and has three children: Troy, who still holds several track records at the Naval Academy; Renee, who graduated from Howard University; and Eric, who is a State champion hurdler, football and track star that will graduate this month from the University of Michigan.

Coach Campbell instills the desire for excellence and pride in all of his athletes. We need to package his formula for success and export it to every school in the Nation. He represents all that is good and right about our State's educational system.

He has allowed me to present an award to the outstanding athlete each year at the Gary Roosevelt Invitational. Past winners include: Jeff Patrick; Dan Young; John Story; and Albert Turner of Gary Roosevelt High School, and Michael Smith of South Bend La Salle High School.

I look forward enthusiastically to my annual participation at this great athletic drama.

I would like for my colleagues to join me in saluting this outstanding Hoosier and to recognize his major contributions to our Nation's future.●

COMBATING THE PROBLEMS OF THE AMERICAN TEEN

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, it is a tragic fact of which we are all well aware that our Nation is plagued by an ever growing culture of drug and alcohol abuse. Each day young children leave their homes to go to school, yet find themselves in a world of difficult decisions and intimidating peer pressure concerning drugs and alcohol. It is for this reason that I would like to call special attention to two exemplary programs that seek to address these urgent issues.

The first program is Project STAR—Student Taught Awareness and Resistance. This is a statewide drug and alcohol prevention program founded by Mr. and Mrs. Ewing M. Kauffman in conjunction with Marion Laboratories, Inc. The core component of the program is the social skills curriculum designed to teach young people to anticipate and to resist the pervasive influence to begin using alcohol and other drugs. The curriculum, which has been ongoing in the State of Missouri and has just been implemented in the State of Kansas, is enacted in the schools by trained classroom teachers. The program is aimed at middle school and junior high school levels.

The second program, also founded by the Ewing M. Kauffman Foundation, is Project Choice. Project Choice focuses on improving the quality of education for high school students. The Kauffman Foundation is offering full college scholarships to those students in the 1988-89 freshman class of Westport High School in Kansas City, MO, who successfully graduate from high school, avoid drugs and alcohol, abstain from parenthood, and actively participate in tutoring programs.

Both Project STAR and Project Choice are fine examples of the progress that can be made in this great nation by its concerned citizenry to assist in combating the spread of drug and alcohol abuse, as well as the epidemic of teen pregnancy. I, therefore, appreciate this opportunity to recognize and commend the efforts of the Kauffman Foundation, Marion Laboratories, Inc., and the school districts participating in these programs.●

TITLE III OF THE HIGHER EDUCATION ACT

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I recently received a letter from a distinguished educator in my home State, Geneva College president Joe McFarland. His letter outlines a serious problem which is affecting our 4-year private colleges. The only type of institutional assistance available to them is the title III A funding under the Higher Education Act. But, Congress has changed the rules on private, 4-year institutions. In 1986, the formula by which title III A funds are spent was altered, and subsequently appropriations declined to the point where there are now absolutely no funds available to 4-year institutions. To illustrate the type of frustration being felt on the institutional level, I ask that President McFarland's letter be printed in the RECORD at this point. Thank you, Mr. President.

The letter follows:

GENEVA COLLEGE,
March 31, 1988.

Senator J. JOHN HEINZ III,
Russell Senate Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR JOHN HEINZ: I am writing to inform you of some of the frustrating circumstances which have become associated with the funding of Title III A program grants and some of the hostility within private 4-year colleges which is resulting from (1) a short-fall in the funding of the program and (2) the untimely manner in which the U.S. Office of Education has conveyed this information to 4-year private colleges.

The problem stems from the fact that historically there has been a percentage of the Title III A monies set-aside for 2-year institutions. In the 1986 Higher Education Amendments, this set-aside was converted from a percentage to a dollar amount ($51,400,000). Because appropations for Title III A were reduced by $15 million to $60 million in FY '88, there is now, apparently, not enough money in the program to either fully fund existing 4-year institution grants or consider any new grant proposals from 4-year institutions.

In a letter from the U.S. Office of Education dated February 29, 1988, we were notified that Geneva College had been designated eligible to compete for a new fiscal year 1988 Strengthening Institutions Program grant, provided the proposal was submitted by a deadline of April 11, 1988 . . . only five weeks later. Because of that calendar, we proceeded to hire a consultant and to engage our own staff, literally, on weekends and evenings to work on the preparation of our proposal. I made a trip to Washington, D.C. a few weeks ago to visit with Mrs. Pat Gore in the Title III office to obtain procedural information. Our Academic Vice President was in Washington, D.C. earlier this week working with our consultant on the proposal when a letter dated March 24 from Dr. Caroline Gillin of the U.S. Office of Education arrived on my desk stating it had now been determined that no money would be available to support proposals from 4-year institutions. I find this type of mismanagement unconscionable, both from the standpoint of the several thousand dollars of wasted monetary resources, which we were forced to invest in order to meet the deadline, as well as the wasted manpower resources which were badly abused as a result of this fiasco.

In the long run and of more critical importance, however, is the necessity of changing the appropriation language. I solicit your support in remedying the circumstances which apparently, by law, leaves the crumbs for struggling private institutions, if there is any money left over. Having worked for most of my life in state supported institutions, I find it paradoxical that 2-year branch campuses of graduate state universities continue to qualify for assistance when private institutions do not. These are institutions which already benefit from both state appropriations and local mill levies, avenues of assistance not available for private 4-year colleges.

I hope this knowledge will bring to your attention the need for some changes in the language, as well as in the level of support, in further Title III A appropriations. I urge your attention to this matter and your support for changes which would provide access to Title III A funding for private 4-year institutions.

JOE MCFARLAND,
President.●

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the budget scorekeeping report for this week, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 308(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report was prepared consistent with standard scorekeeping conventions. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Budget Act.

This report shows that current level spending is under the budget resolution by $900 million in budget authority, and by $2.9 billion in outlays. Current level is under the revenue floor by $10.6 billion.

The current estimate of the deficit for purposes of calculating the maximum deficit amount under section 311(a) of the Budget Act is $154.1 billion, $1.2 billion below the maximum deficit amount for 1988 of $155.3 billion.

The document follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, April 18, 1988.

Hon. LAWTON CHILES,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached report shows the effects of congressional action on the budget for fiscal year 1988 and is current through April 15, 1988. The estimated totals of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are compared to the appropriate or recommended levels contained in the most recent budget resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 93. This report is submitted under section 308(b) and in aid of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended, and meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of section 5 of Senate Concurrent Resolution 32.

No changes have occurred since my last report.

Sincerely,

JAMES L. BLUM,
Acting Director.

G.D. SEARLE & CO.—A CORPORATION DOING GOOD

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, victory is often achieved taking one step at a time. Last week Colorado witnessed a small step taken in the fight to improve health care for the poor, and another step to discourage drunk driving among teenagers.

Last week, G.D. Searle announced it would give $100,000 to Colorado hospitals to pay for cardiovascular drugs needed by low income people who could not otherwise afford them. At least one health expert in Colorado commended this contribution as an important step in improving health care.

Another company, Mr. Tux, announced it would offer $5 discounts on formal wear rented by teenagers who sign a pledge not to drive and drink on prom night.

These creative contributions to improving our quality of life deserve praise. As the Denver Post editorialized, these are examples of corporations "doing business, doing good."

I ask that two articles about these contributions be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The articles follow:

[From the Rocky Mountain News, Apr. 7, 1988]

SEARLE OFFERS HEART DRUGS FREE TO POOR

(By Kris Newcomer)

Free heart and blood-pressure drugs from a major pharmaceutical company will help narrow the health-care gap between Colorado's middle class and its poor, doctors said yesterday.

Premature deaths from heart disease and strokes have dropped 40% and 50% respectively, since the early 1960s, said Dr. Thomas Vernon, state health director. But the poor haven't benefited equally with more well-to-do groups.

"We don't have a universal-access health care system in this country," Vernon said. The free drug program from G.D. Searle & Co. is "an important contribution" to closing the gap, he said.

Vernon spoke at a news conference at which Randy Ade, a spokesman for the Skokie, Ill.-based pharmaceutical giant, handed over coupons worth $100,000 to doctors at Denver General Hospital, Mercy Medical Center and Rocky Mountain Hospital.

Searle's cardiovascular drugs will be available to patients through doctors, who will send in coupons certifying their patient's low-income status.

Annual income guidelines are $8,000 for two-member households, or $11,000 for households of up to four, but Searle is leaving the determination up to physicians.

Searle's Patients in Need program sprang from a pilot project, which last year funneled $10 million worth of the hypertension drug Calan to about 20,000 people nationwide.

Patients in need, which started with simultaneous announcements in 10 cities yesterday, now covers the company's complete line of cardiovascular medications—seven drugs that each cost patients between $12 and $35 per month.

More than 12,000 doctors in Colorado have received letters about the program. Any licensed doctor is eligible to participate on behalf of low-income clients.

The $100,000 is only a start. The company has no cap on how much of the drugs will be available free.

[From the Denver Post, Apr. 9, 1988]

DOING BUSINESS, DOING GOOD

When the next list of commendable capitalists is drawn up, G. D. Searle and Mr. Tux will have to be placed near the top.

The two firms—one a corporate giant, the other a dwarf by comparison—both deserve bouquets for helping to improve the lives of Coloradans this spring.

Searle, the Illinois-based pharmaceutical house, has offered to provide at least $100,000 in free medications to financially needy heart-disease patients in the Denver area. Doctors at Denver General Hospital and two other health centers are being given vouchers that can be exchanged for any of the company's seven most widely used cardiac drugs.

Mr. Tux, a formal-wear rental outfit with two stores in Lakewood and Thornton, is offering $5 discounts to high schoolers who sign a pledge not to drink and drive on prom night. The deal is an expansion of a program the firm launched experimentally last year.

These investments in the health of their customers obviously will pay off in the long term, not only for the companies involved, but also for the community at large. Such socially responsible acts are as fresh and welcome as the first blossoms of the new season.●

THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE U.S. COMMITTEE FOR REFUGEES

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I would like to honor the 30th anniversary of the U.S. Committee for Refugees, the private organization that has long been in the lead in providing timely advocacy and important information and insights about refugees throughout the world.

Refugees, almost by definition, are voiceless; for they are dispossessed and disenfranchised. Fearing persecution from their home countries, they lack the rights of citizenship and throw themselves on the mercy of "host" countries. The U.S. Committee for Refugees, in its vigorous efforts on behalf of refugees over the past 30 years, refuses to let us forget that refugees still have the basic rights universally recognized for all human beings, regardless of their citizenship.

This year's World Refugee Survey, published annually by the U.S. Committee for Refugees, once again sets a high standard of accuracy and objectivity in its reporting on refugee protection worldwide. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Year in Review statement by the committee's distinguished and energetic director, Roger Winter, be entered into the RECORD following my remarks; and I commend it to my colleagues.

The editorial follows:

THE YEAR IN REVIEW

(Rober P. Winter)

Refugees do not occur in a vacuum. They are victims, produced by human actions and inactions. As refugee advocates, we can and do criticize the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for not being effective enough, or countries of asylum for not being generous enough or for failing to live up to "internationally accepted standards" of refugee protection. But the ultimate culprits in the refugee drama are those governments who mistreat their citizens and other governments who serve as direct or indirect accomplices in that mistreatment.

The world has no effective mechanism for selectively intervening in the internal affairs of a nation whose government abuses the fundamental human rights of its own people so as to produce refugees or their often worse off internally displaced counterparts. Thus, the international community is condemned to assisting refugees after much of the damage has been done; and internally displaced people most often do not come to the attention of, let alone receive assistance from, the international community. Some assert that the notion of such a system of intervening is politically naive, unworkable, and the like. Such assertions mask a lack of sufficiently creative, humanitarian leadership and commitment.

Often governments that create refugees, or those who assist such governments, act within an East-West, geopolitical context. Most often that is all they focus on; the displaced civilians are less than a sideshow. One result is that most major refugee upheavals have become long-term affairs. Almost every major refugee-producing conflict has been extant since 1979 or earlier. We are approaching the age of the permanent refugee, where the situations of other displaced populations begin to parallel that of the Palestinian refugees, symbols of the failure of good sense in the international community.

Still there are times when the interests of great powers and other pertinent parties coincide, and meaningful progress for resolving the plight of refugees seems at least possible. This is the hope for 1988. The Central American peace initiative, Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan, Vietnamese withdrawal from Cambodia, an end to civil war in Sri Lanka. Soviet relaxation of emigration restrictions—all these represent possibilities that, if they mature, can produce truly significant progress on the refugee front.

For 1987, however, the worldwide refugee picture has been mixed. Serious concerns have arisen about UNHCR's internal situation and, in particular, its performance of its most fundamental role, that of protecting refugees in the fullest sense of the mandate. Ultimately, however, UNHCR is a creation of governments, and governments are the key to resolving concerns about UNHCR.

The situation of refugees and displaced people throughout southern Africa continued to deteriorate during the year. Refugees from Mozambique fled that devasted land in droves. Thousands continued to enter South Africa, where UNHCR is not present, and many were expelled. In Malawi, numbers increased from 70,000 at the end of 1986 to nearly 400,000 at the end of 1987. When thousands of Mozambican refugees in Zimbabwe were forcibly returned to Mozambique in an unfortunate breach of refugee protection standards, UNHCR was unprepared to exercise its protection role. The pace of violence in Angola accelerated. The number of displaced Angolans climbed dramatically as food production was disrupted by the civil war. Angolan refugees in Zaire and Zambia continued to increase in number, and impending famine conditions promised more. Inside Mozambique, however, cooperation between the government, the international community including active participation by the United States, and many nongovernmental agencies resulted in the implementation of a major relief effort.

Elsewhere in Africa, Sudan, Somalia, and Djibouti continued to host reluctantly major refugee populations, and a major famine emergency again loomed in Ethiopia as the year ended; repatriation to Uganda continued from Sudan and was completed from Zaire.

In Southeast Asia, Thailand, faced with refugees on every border, thankfully continued to offer asylum to many thousands—but not without tragic incidents. In March and November, particularly egregious forced repatriations of Hmong refugees from Laos occurred, with refugee lives unnecessarily lost. Thai authorities did move to improve handling of Hmong asylum seekers late in the year, however. Fighting inside Burma caused an increase of Karen refugees in Thailand, which does not permit UNHCR to function on their behalf. Forced repatriations of Karen were common. Since technically closing Khao I Dang camp in December 1986, Thailand has not yet actually moved many Cambodians to the volatile Thai/Cambodian border. On that border, 270,000 Cambodians continued to languish in unacceptable circumstances. USCR and nongovernmental organizations internationally have insisted that the UN system must do better by this population.

While the percentage of pirate attacks against Vietnamese boat people continued to decline, the number of boat people surged, causing a reaction in countries of first asylum. Indonesia, in an unfortunate reversal of practice, has increasingly deterred Vietnamese boat people from seeking asylum, a dangerous practice that bodes ill for Vietnamese refugees throughout the region. In Vietnam, hundreds of people held in reeducation for years were released, leading to hopes for the remaining 7,000. In nearby Papua New Guinea, UNHCR and local authorities have made some progress in pursuing durable solutions for refugees from the Indonesian province of Irian Jaya.

Pakistan's welcome for Afghan refugees—the world's most massive refugee phenomenon—showed the strains of the last eight years. While the government's official welcome has not changed, scapegoating of refugees has increased. Most of the world continues to hope for the restoration of peace in Sri Lanka, with a resultant possible return of many internally displaced people and refugees, including many now sheltered in south India. The violence surrounding Palestinian refugees continues at disheartening levels—in Lebanon, Israel's occupied territories, and elsewhere. "Palestinization" stands as the world's prime object lesson in what a refugee emergency can lead to if not handled responsibly by the international community and the governments most directly involved. Iran's internal situation, including targeted persecution of Bahai's, and the Iran/Iraq war continued to spawn significant numbers of new refugee victims, though Iran continued to provide asylum to massive numbers of refugees from Afghanistan. In Central America, a successful repatriation of 4,314 Salvadoran refugees from the Mesa Grande camp in Honduras gave a glimpse of what could result if that region's peace process continues. Violence in Suriname caused refugees, primarily ethnic Maroons, to flee in increasing numbers to neighboring French Guiana. In Haiti, the hopes for human rights improvement with resulting benefit in the refugee sphere failed to materialize as violence reasserted its still central role in that society.

In the developed world, Western Europe and North America continually reinforce each other's worst instincts in dealing with asylum seekers, damaging individual asylum seekers, immediately, and the international refugee protection system, ultimately. Canada, having heretofore taken a commendable high road, joined the ranks of the backsiders.

As Swedish colleague Peter Nobel put it—speaking of Europe, but also applying to North America—"Many are therefore dead today who otherwise would have been alive if given the chance to go to Europe and enjoy asylum there. Some died quickly, others in horrible ways. We do not cut throats, but we are busily cutting lifelines."

One wishes for humanitarian consistency from the U.S. government in approaching refugee protection matters, but it is not to be found. U.S. actions are in many cases the most generous in the world; in others, they are indefensible. Take for example this contrast. It is a truly joyous development that Soviet citizens are at last being allowed to emigrate in increased numbers to asylum in the West, in large part because the U.S. government has properly continued to include this issue on its agenda for superpower negotiation. How does one, then, adequately explain the mindset in that same U.S. government towards Haitian asylum seekers?

Since October 1981, the U.S. government has had a program of interdicting Haitian asylum seekers on the high seas. It has been effective as an immigration enforcement technique, but a tragedy on human rights and humanitarian grounds. Since 1981, more than 12,000 interdicted Haitians have been forced back to the caldron that is Haiti. Only two in all that time have been found worthy of asylum in America; they had the bullet holes to show their fear of persecution in Haiti was well-founded. We do not argue that all Haitians meet the test of being refugees, but some clearly do. But how does our government make the moral leap from promoting refugee emigration from the Soviet Union to the United States, to enforcing a prohibition on such emigration from Haiti? The average American—while knowing little of the details of Haitain life and history—knows enough to be aware that fundamental American fairness has been violently breached in the case of Haitian asylum seekers.

Refugee protection, including the provision of asylum, is subject to the changing winds of political bias. Rejecting German Jews seeking admission to the U.S. in 1939—as the United States did—may have been technically correct immigration enforcement. But, looking back, we are all shamed by our inability to see then the larger human rights and humanitarian issues involved. Today, a similarly narrow vision on the part of our government results in long-term imprisonment of some asylum seekers, deportation of others who have reason to fear being forced to return to violent homelands, and political bias in the administration of the asylum system. Those policies result from a misconception within the Administration about what asylum is really all about. Refugee protection, including the provision of asylum, was born in a human rights context. In this country, however, it has become entombed in restrictive immigration enforcement.

In 1988, we can all hope for progress in the conflicts that have spawned the world's 13 million refugees. And in America, we need to work to assure that our own government rethinks the context in which it approaches refugee protection—back to the human rights fundamentals that are the soul of refugee protection.●

RETIRED SENIOR VOLUNTEER PROGRAM

● Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, also known as RSVP.

RSVP is a national program with 751 projects throughout the United States and over 400,000 volunteers. Across the Nation RSVP volunteers serve in schools, hospitals, libraries, museums, nursing homes, day-care centers, food banks, senior centers, and many other organizations. They range in age from 60 to 103 years and they come from all walks of life: from people with no formal education to Ph.D.'s, housewives and executives, indeed the list is as varied as America itself.

Volunteers make a tremendous contribution to our society. It has been estimated that American volunteers provide over $65 billion in services to people in both the United States and in foreign countries. Seniors are especially valuable volunteers because of the wide range of skills and life experiences they often bring to their volunteer work. By sharing this knowledge and expertise with others, seniors enrich the lives of those they aid and make our society as a whole a better place.

Today at 2 p.m., balloons will be released across the country to honor the contributions RSVP seniors have made. As part of the great RSVP balloon launch, balloons will be released right here at the Capitol, as well as in my home State of Washington, and in every State across the Nation. I hope my other colleagues in the Senate will have the opportunity to see these balloons floating over the Capitol and will take the time to reflect on the contributions that senior volunteers have made to each of their communities.●

NATIONAL EATING DISORDERS AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of a resolution introduced by my distinguished colleague, Senator MIKULSKI, to designate the week of April 24 to 30, 1988, as "National Eating Disorders Awareness Week." I commend Senator MIKULSKI for taking the lead in this effort to focus public attention on these often hidden disorders.

The two most common eating disorders are anorexia and bulimia. Anorexia—also known as "starvation sickness"—involves a pattern of excessive dieting over a period of months or even years. Bulimia is a related disorder of compulsive binging and purging. Both are serious emotional disorders that can lead to physical illness and death.

While eating disorders can affect men and women of all ages, they are most prevalent among younger women. A recent Gallup poll projected that roughly 2 million American women between the ages of 19 and 39 are affected by symptoms of bulimia or anorexia. An additional 1 million teenagers also suffer from these disorders.

The causes of anorexia and bulimia remain uncertain. Many studies suggest that social and psychological factors are involved, while research at the National Institutes of Health has shown that biological factors may play a role as well. What is certain is that early treatment is essential to recovery. Without early intervention, eating disorders become more and more entrenched, increasing the chances of serious physical injury.

The hidden nature of eating disorders is the most serious impediment to their early diagnosis and treatment. For this reason it is imperative that we greatly increase the public's awareness of this problem. I am pleased that Senator MIKULSKI is seeking to do just this through the establishment of an "Eating Disorders Awareness Week." I hope this effort will help put an end to the pain and suffering that eating disorders have caused in the lives of so many Americans.

I encourage my colleagues to join me in supporting this joint resolution and I urge its immediate passage.●

S. 1009 INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 1009 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FORD). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate when it completes its business today it stand in recess until the hour of 9:30 tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the two leaders have been recognized under the standing order there be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 10 a.m. and that Senators may speak for not to exceed 5 minutes each during the period for morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESUMPTION OF CONSIDERATION OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT RESOLUTION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning the Senate resume consideration of the constitutional amendment resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TIME FOR DEBATE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be 1 hour of debate on that joint resolution on tomorrow, to be equally divided and controlled by Mr. HOLLINGS and the Republican leader or his designee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR VOTES TOMORROW

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is a great likelihood—as a matter of fact, almost a certainty—that a motion to table the Gramm amendment will be made at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. Senators should be prepared for a rollcall vote at that hour.

I ask unanimous consent that such a vote, if it occurs, be a 15-minute rollcall vote and that the regular order be automatic at the conclusion of 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, following that tabling motion on tomorrow, other votes are expected in relation to the constitutional amendment, and it is conceivable that the amendment will be disposed of one way or the other.

I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for a cloture vote to occur on tomorrow—if the two leaders agree that a cloture vote may occur on tomorrow—following the tabling vote or at any point tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. That cloture vote would occur on the Hollings amendment to the motion to commit with instructions.

So that cloture vote, if the two leaders agree, during tomorrow, will occur.

Whether or not there will be other votes in relation to the amendment remains to be seen. But it is conceivable that, one way or the other, final action could be taken on tomorrow, in which case, then, the Senate would go to the AIDS bill—A-I-D-S bill. That is S. 1220.

If that scenario becomes an actuality, this would mean, then, the Senate would probably be on the AIDS bill tomorrow and probably Friday. Hopefully, action could be completed on that bill before the week is out.

The stage then would be set—again, hopefully—for the trade conference report beginning Monday.

Does the distinguished Republican leader have any comments or statements?

Mr. DOLE. If the majority leader will yield, my view is that we should be able to dispose of the constitutional amendment, hopefully, shortly after noon and, as the majority leader has indicated, go to the AIDS legislation.

There are about 18 amendments pending. I am not certain how many will be offered. Most of them will come from this side.

But we should be able to dispose of that legislation as the majority leader suggests on Friday, and I assume it will be his desire to do that; in other words, we complete action.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. Or be here on Friday until we completed action.

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I would hope that the Senate could complete action on Friday on that measure.

Mr. DOLE. Then that would leave outstanding a trade conference report and hopefully a budget conference report, which I assume we could take up then next week.

Mr. BYRD. I would hope that the budget conference report could be disposed of before the Senate goes out for the May break.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I understand that the distinguished Republican leader has a measure that he would like to process through rule XIV.

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

I thank the distinguished majority leader.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3606) for the relief of Brenda W. Gay.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, now I ask for its second reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The bill will remain on the desk pending the second reading on the next legislative day.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does the distinguished Republican leader have anything else at the moment?

Mr. DOLE. No.

We have cleared some things.

Mr. BYRD. Very well.

RELIEF OF MARISELA, FELIX, AND WILLIAM MARRERO

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of H.R. 3439 just received from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3439), for the relief of Marisela, Felix, and William Marrero.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 3439) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

INDIAN DEVELOPMENT FINANCE CORPORATION ACT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 596, S. 721, the Indian economic development bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 721) to provide for and promote the economic development of Indian tribes by furnishing the necessary capital, financial services, and technical assistance to Indian-owned business enterprises and to stimulate the development of the private sector of Indian tribal economics.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof, the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Indian Development Finance Corporation Act".

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) a special relationship has existed between the United States and the Indian tribes which is recognized in clause 3, section 8, article I of the United States Constitution,

(2) Congress, through statutes, treaties and the exercise of administrative authorities, has implemented the Federal Government's responsibility for the protection and preservation of Indian tribes and their resources,

(3) despite the availability of abundant, natural resources on Indian lands and a rich, cultural legacy which places great value on self-determination, self-reliance and independence, American Indians and Alaskan Natives experience poverty and unemployment along with the associated incidences of social pathology, to an extent unequaled by any other group in America,

(4) the reasons for such unparalleled poverty and unemployment have been widely studied and documented by the Congress, the General Accounting Office, the United States Department of the Interior, private academic institutions and the Indian tribes themselves and that such studies have consistently identified as fundamental obstacles to balanced economic growth and progress—

(A) the very limited availability of long term development capital and sources of financial credit necessary to support the development of a private sector economy in Indian country comprised of Indian owned business enterprises,

(B) the lack of effective control by the Indians over their own lands and resources, and

(C) the scarcity of experienced Indian managers and technicians,

(5) previous efforts of the Federal Government directed at stimulating Indian economic development through the provision of grants, direct loans, loan guarantees, and interest subsidies have fallen far short of their objectives due to—

(A) inadequate funds,

(B) lack of coordination,

(C) arbitrary project selection criteria,

(D) politicization of the delivery system, and

(E) other inefficiencies characteristic of a system of publicly administered financial intermediation, and

(6) the experience acquired by multilateral lending institutions among the so-called lesser developed countries has demonstrated the value and necessity of development financing institutions in achieving economic growth in underdeveloped economies and societies which are strikingly similar to Indian and Alaskan Native communities in relation to such matters as control over natural resource management and the absence of experienced, indigenous managers and technicians, as well as the availability of long term development capital and private sources of financial credit.

(b) It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress that, in fulfillment of its special and longstanding responsibility to the Indian tribes, the Federal Government should provide assistance to the Indian people in their efforts to break free from the devastating effects of extreme poverty and unemployment and achieve lasting economic self-sufficiency through the development of the private sector of tribal economies by establishing a federally chartered, mixed ownership development financing institution which shall provide a broad range of financial intermediary services including working capital, direct loans, loan guarantees and project development assistance utilizing the proven efficiencies of the private market mode of operation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1972) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION PLACED ON CALENDAR

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 287, a joint resolution to designate the month of May 1988 as "Older Americans Month" and that the resolution be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate will convene at 9:30 tomorrow morning. After the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, there will be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 10 a.m. during which Senators will be permitted to speak not to exceed 5 minutes each.

At 10 a.m., the Senate will resume consideration of the joint resolution providing for a constitutional amendment in reference to limitation on expenditures in Presidential and congressional campaigns. There will be 1 hour of debate equally controlled by Mr. HOLLINGS and Mr. DOLE or his designee, and at circa 11 a.m., the motion to table is intended to be made and that will be a rollcall vote in all likelihood. There is no question but that it will be, and it will be a 15-minute rollcall vote and the call for the regular order will be automatic.

Following that vote, there will be other rollcall votes during the day in connection with the constitutional amendment.

If the amendment is disposed of, one way or another, on tomorrow, the Senate will then take up the AIDS legislation. Amendments are expected to that bill and rollcall votes are expected thereon. I hope that the Senate will have a full day of action on those two measures tomorrow. It is conceivable—I am not predicting it—that the Senate will complete action on the AIDS legislation tomorrow, but we still have Friday and we expect a good day's work on Friday.

RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 9:30 tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and, at 5:40 p.m., the Senate recessed until Thursday, April 21, 1988, at 9:30 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, April 20, 1988

The House met at 2 p.m.

Rabbi Arnold Mark Belzer, Temple Beth Rishon, Wyckoff, NJ, offered the following prayer:

Lord G-d, Creator of all humanity, Cause love, harmony and peace to abide among us. Cause us to know that in a world faced with monumental challenges that there can be no neutrality—"either we are the ministers of the sacred or the slaves of evil."

Lord during recent generations great evil has been revealed to us. Let us through our lives, be witness to the revelation of goodness.

Lord, we know that we will triumph over evil if we shall be as sacrificial, courageous, and steadfast "in our homes, our schools, and offices, and in our Congress as our soldiers have been on the fields of battle."

Give us strength in moments of temptation. Renew our faith, at times of doubt. Give us courage, in moments of weariness. Hallow our lives with loyalty and integrity.

May our prayers be with us as we face the world and may Your presence in our hearts be reflected in the way we live our lives.

Dear G-d, bless the Members of the House of Representatives their staff people and the pages who serve them. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

REMARKS TO WELCOME RABBI ARNOLD MARK BELZER OF FRANKLIN LAKES, NJ

(Mr. ROE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today to welcome an outstanding religious leader from my Eighth Congressional District of New Jersey, Rabbi Arnold Mark Belzer of Franklin Lakes, who has offered us a most inspirational message in providing the opening prayer to our session today.

Rabbi Belzer is with Temple Beth Rishon of Wyckoff, NJ, which is also known as the Wyckoff-Franklin Lakes Synagogue. Temple Beth Rishon has served as the spiritual home for a great many worshipers from the greater northwest Bergen County, NJ, area for the past 13 years. I might note that when Rabbi Belzer assumed the leadership of Temple Beth Rishon in 1981, the congregation numbered 125 families. Today, through his dynamic and visionary leadership, that number has risen to 360 families and this fine congregation is still growing. And, in addition to his congregational duties, Rabbi Belzer also serves as east coast director of the Sino-Judaic Institute and as vice president of the Mastery Foundation, an ecumenical organization which trains clergy of all denominations.

Mr. Speaker, along with coming to Washington to offer our opening prayer here this morning, Rabbi Belzer has one other important mission here, to visit his son, Nathan Belzer. Nathan, who I am proud to say is my page here in Congress, has not only been elected president of his page class while maintaining a perfect 4.0 average in his studies, but also has been selected as the Speaker's page, accomplishments of which I know his father and mother are justifiably proud.

I want to invite you, Mr. Speaker, and all of our colleagues to join me in welcoming Rabbi Arnold Mark Belzer to the House this afternoon.

TODDLER TAX CREDIT

(Mr. SCHULZE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, child care in America is under scrutiny by Congress, the media, and the American public. Some are claiming critical child care shortages exist and would address this with broad legislation providing for Federal funding and regulation of day-care centers. They would spend billions to assist but a small fraction of American children, primarily from affluent families.

Today, I am offering a better legislative alternative. The toddler tax credit provides a $750 tax credit for each child in America under age 6. This tax cut would support all American children and help offset the erosion of the personal exemption and eliminate the antichild bias in our tax system.

Mr. Speaker, effective child care legislation should not discriminate between home care and day care. The toddler tax credit does not discriminate. Let's provide relief to all families with children rather than spend tax dollars funding bureaucrats.

FOREIGN NURSES AND IMMIGRATION

(Mrs. ROUKEMA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, thousands of foreign professional nurses who are here in this country to help our hospitals and nursing facilities deal with the severe nursing shortage may now be facing an order to leave the country because a callous Immigration and Naturalization Service is refusing to extend the length of the H-1 visas these nurses are holding.

Hospitals in New Jersey, as in other parts of the Nation, are experiencing a shortfall of skilled medical personnel. Nationally, there are approximately 200,000 skilled nurse positions currently vacant. This already intolerable situation will now be further exacerbated by the perverse and even pernicious policies of the INS.

It is ironic to me that today we will be voting on a bill to extend the blanket amnesty afforded illegal aliens who blatantly circumvented immigration laws while these highly skilled and much needed professionals, who played by the rules, are being told to go home.

The INS policy is shortsighted and needs to be reviewed. I have asked INS Commissioner Nelson to make this a priority effort so that our hospitals will not be forced to curtail medical services or to recruit a new group of nurses who must be retrained and oriented to the operations of the facilities who hire them. I would also urge my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee to look into this matter and find a solution.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1049

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 1049, the Utility Ratepayer Refund Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

AMNESTY EXTENSION—THE AMERICAN THING TO DO

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

☐ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., ☐ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, extending the immigration deadline for 7 months is the right thing to do. It is the American thing to do. It is a matter of simple justice.

This bill is not a bill for Hispanics; it is not a bill for illegal aliens. It is a vote in the tradition of this country that we are doing the right thing.

Millions of human beings wanting to come out of the shadows have not been able to because of a lack of public education efforts. This bill simply says that we are extending the deadline by 7 months. We are not changing the rules, we are not allowing anyone an extra in, and it simply says to those 2 million around this country that probably have not heard about this program, that probably do not have the facilities to make themselves available of acting financially on this program—it says you have 7 more months.

Mr. Speaker, that is the tradition of this country. That is the spirit in which we pass immigration law and the legalization program. We should extend this deadline because it is the American thing to do, and it is a matter of simple justice.

ANTI-TOY GUN THREAT ACT

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to encourage my colleagues—on both sides of the aisle—to cosponsor a bill which I am introducing today. This bill, the Anti-Toy Gun Threat Act, will impose a mandatory 5-year prison term for anyone using a toy or imitation firearm in the commission of a Federal crime of violence or Federal drug trafficking crime. This legislation is needed to close a gaping loophole concerning these toy weapons in the Federal criminal statutes.

The Anti-Toy Gun Threat Act would simply apply the same punishment to individuals who use a toy gun to commit a Federal crime which exists for those who use a real gun. Unlike other proposals to address the misuse of toy weapons, my legislation will not infringe on consumer choice or force costly regulations on toy manufacturers. Instead, it will impose a punishment for using a nonfunctioning gun for a criminal purpose.

While seemingly harmless, the use of a toy gun has as great a potential for tragic consequences as the same actions committed with a real firearm. Congress should impose a mandatory prison term to deter the future use of toy or imitation firearms in violent crimes.

AMEND THE WAR POWERS RESOLUTION

(Mr. DeFAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DeFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, the President has indicated that recent events in the Persian Gulf do not require him to submit a war powers report to Congress. We must be reading different versions of the United States Code. The War Powers Resolution requires the President to submit a report "in any case in which United States Armed Forces are introduced into hostilities * * *."

Mr. Speaker, when the Bridgeton hit a mine last July, that was not considered "hostilities." When U.S. helicopters fired on, and boarded an Iranian minelayer, that was not "hostilities." When U.S. destroyers attacked an Iranian oil platform that apparently wasn't a hostile act, either. But now, even the President's own Secretary of Defense is calling this week's actions in the gulf hostilities.

There can be no doubt that the War Powers Resolution applies here and now. The President is blatantly disregarding his sworn duty to faithfully execute the law and depriving Congress of its legitimate role in the process.

Two months ago, I introduced legislation to amend the War Powers Resolution. We need an effective War Powers Resolution. It's obvious we don't have one. If the President violates the law, our current options are to impeach him or to sit on our hands while he gets the Nation into a war. My bill provides a third avenue. I am asking my colleagues for their support.

PEACE INTO THE 21ST CENTURY

(Mr. DORNAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, this morning at 11 o'clock eastern daylight time, 8 o'clock Pacific daylight time, the beautiful B-2 bomber, or at least an artist's conception of it, was released to the American press, and free world press. I am sure that even this artist's conception of the B-2 Stealth bomber is at this moment being telefaxed to the Soviets in the Kremlin. With bipartisan congressional support the Air Force will develop and procure 132 of these B-2 Stealth bombers. This beautiful aircraft is made by Northrop Aviation of southern California. Many Members have seen the mockup of this aircraft in what was previously a totally top secret program in Air Force plant 42 in Palmdale, southern California.

□ 1415

The Air Force also announced this morning the first flight of the ATB or advanced technology bomber will take place sometime this fall.

I do not know about my colleagues, but I intend to be there at Palmdale when it lifts off, and then lands at Edwards Air Force Base, where flight testing will be conducted. The late Jack Northrop, one of America's aviation geniuses, a terrific man, the designer of the YB-49 "Flying Wing" which was canceled in a scandalous way by a prior administration, is vindicated with this new beautiful flying wing, the B-2 Stealth bomber that will keep the peace and ensure an important capability to penetrate Soviet air defenses well into the 21st century.

IN SUPPORT OF THE CONFERENCE REPORT ON THE TRADE BILL

(Mr. JONTZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JONTZ. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the Commerce Department released the trade deficit figures for February. The United States imported $13.8 billion more than we exported that month. This is the highest trade deficit since last October and should send Congress a strong message about the need to pass the trade bill later this week.

Mr. Speaker, the continuing imbalance between our exports and imports is hurting our Nation and our Nation's working families. By passing the trade bill we can address the causes as well as the consequences of these record trade deficits.

Quite frankly, I think the bill should be stronger. I am disappointed that the Gephardt amendment and the Bryant amendment, in particular, were removed during conference.

But there is still much that is good about H.R. 3, and I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the conference report on this bill when it comes before the House tomorrow.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 268, BUDGET FOR THE U.S. GOVERNMENT FOR FISCAL YEARS 1989, 1990, AND 1991

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 268) setting forth the congressional budget for the U.S. Government for fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT OFFERED BY MR. THOMAS OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS of California moves that the managers on the part of the House, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House Concurrent Resolution 268, be instructed to negotiate a funding level in the fiscal year 1989 budget resolution that emphasizes the high priority of fighting the war on drugs but that nevertheless continues to comply with the discretionary spending caps and the revenue level agreed to in the budget summit by the President and joint leadership of Congress on November 20, 1987.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], the chairman of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. Speaker, I have moved that the House instruct the conferees on the fiscal year 1989 budget resolution to stand by the summit agreement which was reached just last November. The motion also calls on the conferees within the boundary set by that summit agreement to continue to recognize the high priority that must be given to fighting the war on drugs. These two goals are not inconsistent. Of course it would be easier and probably far more dramatic to follow the course of the other body and to continue the old pattern of raising spending and raising taxes and do so without examining any kind of limitation on competing priorities.

But such a course not only violates the letter but of course the spirit of the summit agreement.

There are many of us in this body who felt that the summit agreement was not the best approach to the problems facing this Congress. Lukewarm at best might have been an indication of the feeling. I know on my side of the aisle there were a significant number of absolute noes. But once the summit agreement was reached those of us laboring in the Committee on the Budget on both the majority and minority sides felt that the agreement between the administration, the leadership of the Senate, and the leadership of the House must be honored in our structuring of the framework of the 1989 budget agreement.

It was very, very difficult for the members of the Committee on the Budget to do that. It is always difficult when one has unlimited needs and limited resources. Nevertheless I think the exercise was a very commendable one. I especially want to compliment the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY] the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, and the ranking member, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] for setting out at the beginning of the process on a single sheet of paper what we as Members on both sides of the aisle felt was the meaning of the summit agreement, it was our guiding literature as we discussed priorities.

The Budget Committee broke into subgroups, we had very, very contested discussions, we came together in caucuses, we continued the contested discussions, we went priority against priority, and we did that which was very difficult. But within the spending and revenue levels prescribed by the summit agreement, we fashioned a 1989 fiscal year budget. We did what we thought was the responsible thing. This is the absolute wrong time to abandon that framework that we structured. The pressure is just beginning to add more taxes and to spend more money. We are not at the conclusion of the process, we have barely begun. There are undoubtedly dozens or even more very, very worthwhile, justifiable and, of course, politically attractive items that folks want to add to the budget especially in an election year.

We knew at the time that we set out the agreement to stay within the summit that that would be the case. All of us on the Committee on the Budget are disappointed with the end product and I think that is what the budget process is supposed to produce. It is accommodation, it is compromise, and it is not satiation. What we had to do in a very difficult climate was to accommodate and compromise. There is no question that fighting the war on drugs deserves a high priority. Few in the Congress would disagree with that premise. Even as we struggle to stay within the summit agreement, we prioritized the war on drugs.

If my colleagues will examine the budget document, we have in function after function, placed an emphasis on the war on drugs.

This motion will instruct our conferees when they negotiate with the Senate to continue to recognize the high priority that must be placed on combating the drug problem but to do so within the limits placed on us by the summit agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the instruction motion, first let me as chairman of the Committee on the Budget commend the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] for his hard efforts in putting together a budget resolution for the House that was bipartisan and that clearly reflected the kinds of priorities that were needed we feel in this Nation. However, there were three things that we had to do: First, we had to meet the budget summit agreement in terms of the spending caps and revenue figures that were agreed on for a 2-year period; second, we had to meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target; and third, we had to avoid sequestration. This was not an easy task to hit all three targets, but as the gentleman from California knows, we did successfully hit all three of those targets.

We had to make difficult decisions with regard to funding levels. We had to choose between what I like to call the essential, and the desirable. Essential spending needs of the Nation, desirable being those things that we would like to have but in a time of growing red ink we could not afford unless there was an agreement to pay for them, and since we were not able to get more than the $25 billion of new revenues over a 2-year period in the budget summit, that made our job very difficult. As we tried to prioritize and choose between what was essential and what was desirable, certainly there were things that we would like to have done differently. All of us had our priorities, all of us recognized the need for investment in certain areas but because of the limitations that we had we had to make choices. So when we looked at the House position, my colleagues will find that there were significant increases of 10, 12, 13 percent, and in other areas we had a freeze at the 1988 level and in some other areas we actually made cuts below the 1988 level, all in the attempt to meet those three targets which we did.

In the area of drugs and fighting the war on the proliferation of drugs that is taking place in this country and the crimes that are related thereto, the committee came forward and supported a significant increase in funds for the fight with regard to the war on drugs. However, I think what the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] is trying to say with regard to the instruction motion is that whatever is done in conference should be done in accordance with the budget summit, meeting the spending and revenue caps, meeting the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets and avoiding sequestration. Therefore, as chairman of the committee I certainly do not have any objection to that statement being made while at the same time saying that we want to do all that we can in waging the war against the proliferation of drugs. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I as chair have no objection to the nonbinding instruction and certainly I know that this will put the House on record with regard to making a very strong statement.

I should also point out that as chairman of the Committee on the Budget, in the budget agreement we did say that if there was a national crisis, if there was an emergency that it would be possible to break that budget summit. However, to break that budget summit we need executive as well as congressional support. It is very clear at this stage that the executive branch of Government, the President and his spokespersons have made it very clear that they are not prepared to declare any national crisis at this time that calls for the breaking of the summit agreement. Therefore, what the gentleman from California is simply saying is that as we go to the conference that we ought to comply with the budget summit, hit the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target and avoid sequestration, which I do not find objectionable at all.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Rogers], a member of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion with a little bit of hesitancy because I would in fact even though along with a possible situation where if the White House, the Senate, and the House could agree that we would even break the caps to fight the war on drugs because there are new developments in fact in the war on drugs that I think warrant the attention of the Congress and the committee and the Nation in fact that allow us an even enhanced chance to destroy and do away with the tremendous crops being grown particularly in Latin America that the Attorney General has reported to us that he discovered and observed on his recent trip to Latin America.

The language of the motion I think is adequate. It gives the proper emphasis to singling out the war on drugs as an area that we should relook at as we go into conference, and notifies the members of the conference from the other body that we do share the heightened awareness of the problem of the war on drugs and the need, the desperate need in fact of additional funds for the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the agencies of Justice and the Coast Guard and the other agencies of the Government involved in the fight.

Those agencies are woefully underfunded as they are, and under the new budget numbers will be even more cramped in their style, not only in the war on drugs but in the war on crime in general.

So I welcome this language and I commend the gentleman from California [Mr. Thomas] for offering the language to instruct the conferees to emphasize the high priority of fighting the war on drugs without breaking the discretionary caps on spending and revenue. The budget summit, my colleagues will recollect, included language which said that the caps would be binding except in, as the language says, a dire emergency. If there is an emergency, even a dire emergency in this country, I think almost everyone would say that that emergency exists in the massive infusion of cocaine into this country particularly from Latin America.

As I said before, there are some opportunities for us as a nation in Latin America in the war on drugs that are opening up to us in the way of eradication that we simply cannot take advantage of with present funding levels. I welcome the language that the gentleman from California has offered to instruct the conferees on the emphasis on the war on drugs. I would even hope at some point in time that all of the parties involved would be able to agree to even break the caps for some additional funds for this particular purpose.

So I rise in strong support of the language. I would take it further even that the gentleman's language is satisfactory.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCollum].

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting motion because it directs us to some of the things about budgeting that have already made a difference around here in the last few months. We need to set some priorities, we need to set priorities within the budgeting structure, and I know that is what was intended when the summit took place. But to me the very essence of that requires us to say there are things like the drug war that need the kind of attention and additional resources that we simply do not get by everyday, routine consideration in the committees that we have around here.

But when it comes to the budgeting process, why do we not take that from somewhere else, reduce spending, make those tough choices? Why do we always get the solution that we see so often down here and we see from the other body in this case to add more money in at the beginning before we even consider exactly where we would spend it?

As the head of the Republican Task Force on Drugs, I have been looking, and our task force has been looking at all kinds of options that we might have in dealing with the war on drugs that we will not be using now. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Rogers] named a couple of areas we might be looking at. We certainly need to revisit some that do not need the expenditure of any money. This body in the past, when we considered the omnibus drug bill in the last Congress, passed a death penalty for major drug traffickers. Unfortunately, that did not make it into the final product. We need to look at that again. There is no reason why this Congress and this country should not have the death penalty in law and carry out the death penalty in the case of major drug traffickers. We need a heavy deterrent, and that requires no money. It simply requires the will of this body and the people to do so.

We also need to look at the demand side in the area of drug users. This body did pass, and it was adopted into law last time around, a Federal provision which actually makes it a crime for the initial use of drugs by anybody in America. But unfortunately, the teeth are not in that law, and the States who are right on the front line have not adopted similar laws and taken steps in order to enforce that kind of deterrent for drug use.

There are some needs that do require money though. We need more jails, we need more prosecutors, we need support for education and rehabilitation on the demand side of this equation, and we definitely need to assist the efforts at interdiction and eradication programs that are being conducted by some of our friends who are attempting to do this abroad, and our Drug Enforcement Administration.

It is best to get this without going through the process though of breaking anybody's budget summit, and I am going to support the effort today in this motion. But like the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Rogers] I certainly reserve the right to come back here at some point in the future, and I am sure all of the Members feel this way, and I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gray] does, and seek additional resources if it turns out after we look at these alternatives that indeed the summit should be broken in some fashion. But not today, not under the circumstances of the consideration of the budget conference.

I urge my colleagues to vote for this motion, and I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Shaw].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY] said this is going to be making a strong statement. It does make a strong statement, but it does not make a strong enough statement.

I want to ask all of my colleagues now if they would just reflect for a moment. We have constantly in this Chamber and in committees around Capitol Hill talked about drug containment. We do not hear what witnesses talking about an agenda, about what it is that is going to solve the problem.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to be here in the year 1998 talking about the same problem and again talking about spending more money on this problem. The problem is that we do not in this country have a blueprint for absolute victory, a blueprint that will say by the year 1995 we can be a drug-free society here in the United States.

Why is that? It is because this administration, previous administrations, this Congress, the Senate, everybody follows a policy of drug containment. This will not work. In order to win the war against drugs we have to adopt news, tighter measures. We have to get serious about the violation of the law and punish the drug user. A lot of us are not very comfortable with that, but this has to be done. We have to again, as my colleague from Florida, Mr. McCOLLUM, mentioned, address the question of the death penalty in the most severe circumstances. We are not talking about putting to death a guy who is peddling the stuff on the street. We are talking about the kingpin, the one who may very well be down holed up in Colombia or some other country around this world pulling the strings and killing our youth. We have to talk about that. We have to talk about the death penalty for those who would kill our DEA agents, our drugs agents around the globe. We have to talk about that.

We have to again pass a posse comitatus provision which will get our Armed Forces more involved. We have to pass the necessary legislation to allow our military to be involved in other countries around the globe where they are needed to assist the local police and local military in wiping out this drug threat.

Right now we know that Colombia is an absolute basket case. With all of the desire that they could possibly muster, they cannot take control of their own country because they are so overrun with this cancerous growth.

Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is tomorrow I am going to be filing the toughest drug package that has ever been filed here in the Congress of the United States. I am asking my colleagues to look at this bill, examine it, and see if this does not involve new and more innovative ways of using our present assets to get after the drug problem in this country and to win in this regard.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAW. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for seconding the thesis that was propounded by his colleague from Florida, Mr. McCOLLUM, and I want to join with the gentleman to help push through the new product he is going to be producing tomorrow here on the floor.

In the meantime, I want to add some horror stories to what the gentleman has already told about what this drug kingpin is able to do. He has been able in the past to execute a judge, to kill a judge who was about to pass sentence on a drug smuggler in Texas. The drug kingpin, the drug czar ordered successfully the execution of that judge.

More recently in New York a police officer who was guarding the home of a witness who was going to testify in a major drug case was himself executed in cold blood at the direction of a drug kingpin who himself was in prison.

So the gentleman's comments are well taken on the necessity for the imposition of the death penalty for these stop-at-nothing killers.

Mr. SHAW. Reclaiming my time, I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who I assume will be an original cosponsor of this bill I am going to file tomorrow, that the language of his death penalty that he has been supporting in committee and here trying to get the language to the floor, is contained almost exactly in the bill that we are going to be filing.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that we must join together as Democrats and Republicans and say that the war on drugs is going to be a real war. We are talking about waging world war III. We have to do it together, we have to do it with our military, we have to do it with the full assets and the full reserve of the Federal Government behind us. Without it, we are simply fighting a war of containment.

Again I want to compliment the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY] and thank them for this language. It is certainly a meaningful step, but there is much more to be done. I would hope that we could join together and push a real powerful drug bill that is going to send out all of the right messages.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise in favor of his motion that would aim our efforts toward the drug effort in this country, but do so within the budget summit agreement.

Let me say I start with the premise that the drug fight is probably one of the most important priorities that we face as a nation. The question is, Can we do it within the amounts of money that are allocated to the Federal Government under the budget summit agreement? I suggest we can.

I suggest the President has recently sent to this Congress a rescission package for $1.5 billion that is pure pork that was passed in the continuing resolution last year, and that those items of pork could in fact be reduced in order to have this priority of fighting drugs addressed.

Let me cite to my colleagues some of the things we might be able to reduce spending on in order to fight an all-out war on drugs. For example, the continuing resolution had in it $10 million for the USDA to purchase surplus sunflower oil. Let me suggest that might be very important to a few people, but $10 million for sunflower oil is not as important a priority as fighting drugs.

That particular bill had $2.6 million earmarked for the development of domestic and international markets for U.S. fishery products. Again, some people may say that is important. The question is whether or not it is more important than fighting drugs in this country.

That particular bill had $43.2 million in it for outlays for 15 Department of Energy construction projects, 12 of which were new starts that had never been submitted by DOE, nor had they ever been submitted to a peer review process. In other words, they are projects that were pure pork added on in the Congress. Once again, people may say those are very important. Are they more important than fighting drugs? I would suggest not.

There was $17.1 million in outlays earmarked for 14 highway demonstration projects. Again, highway demonstration projects are very important, but are they more important than fighting drugs? No.

There was $500,000 authorized to bring foreign politicians to the United States to sit in our gallery and watch Congress at work. I would suggest that that $500,000 might better be spent fighting drugs than having foreign politicians in the gallery.

There was $500,000 for the Seattle Goodwill Games Organizing Committee, a nice project if we had all of the money in the world, but it is far more important to fight drugs than to give money to a televised event.

There was $6.4 million to finance a gondola transportation system somewhere out in Idaho for a ski system out there to attract tourists, $6.4 million. I am sure that area in Idaho would love to have it, but $6.4 million could better be spent fighting drugs in this country.

What I am suggesting is the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] has a very reasonable resolution before us. What he is saying is let us fight drugs, let us put that as a concentration, as what we want to do as a Federal Government, but let us find the money within the Federal budget to do so. By citing a list like this, I am only saying there is plenty of room within the Federal budget to find the money we need in order to conduct an all-out war on drugs.

□ 1445

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes, for purposes of debate only, to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SWINDALL].

Mr. SWINDALL. I thank the gentleman from yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak strongly, in favor of the gentleman's resolution.

On Monday evening I stood in a neighborhood in my own district where the parents of young kids had asked me to come and talk about this very issue—the issue of drugs destroying our children, our families, our neighborhoods and, yes, our very Nation. They were talking about it out of concern and out of despair. They said their neighborhood had been taken over by drug dealers. They said it is now a common occurrence to see drug deals being conducted on street corners and they simply do not know what to do. So they called on their Congressmen, not so much expecting a solution but simply to vent their frustrations.

The very next day I went to the White House to participate in a memorial service for the Drug Enforcement Agency officers and other law enforcement officers who have lost their lives in the line of duty. I mention those two events because when it comes to dealing with the budget it is important to remember that whether you are dealing with a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget or the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings proposal, all of those have common language that says all the rules of budgeting go out the window in the event you have one of two occurrences: One is a war, the other is a national emergency.

I would suggest that the facts dictate that we are now engaged in both, a national emergency and a war, because truly there are victims to the war that is now ongoing.

Last week in Atlanta a kindergarten-aged child lost, possibly, his right to ever walk again because he was shot down on the streets of a housing project in Atlanta, GA, by drug underworld figures.

According to newspaper reports, he was on his way to a neighbor's home to get a "Freezie."

I am a father of a 3½-year-old and a 1½-year-old and nothing concerns me greater than the battle that is going on right now. The problem is the enemy has limitless resources. It is time for us to prioritize our budgeting in such a way that we begin to at least match our rhetoric with the reality of the national emergency and war that presently exist.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my support for the motion to instruct the conferees on House Concurrent Resolution 268, offered by my good friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS]. We must find a way to provide the desperately needed resources to fight the war on drugs while staying within the discretionary spending limits and sticking to the budget summit agreement with the White House.

One of the most important responsibilities as Members of Congress is to choose between competing needs. I can think of no greater need than fighting drugs. The production, trafficking and consumption of illicit narcotics is threatening our neighborhoods just as severely as it is threatening Latin American governments. There have already been too many American casualties in the war against drugs.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this prudent motion. We must work together, in this time of fiscal restraint, to effectively combat the danger of illegal drugs.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would urge my colleagues to support this motion. A budget is simply a listing of our priorities. Let us tell our conferees to negotiate a high continuing priority for the war on drugs but to do so within the strictures of the summit agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] who has been intimately involved in this whole effort with regard to drugs.

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I will try not to take all the time. I know you want to get on with the business at hand.

Mr. Speaker, I do support the motion to instruct conferees. I congratulate my colleagues on offering the motion.

Let me just say we declared war on drugs 2 years ago; and 5 months after that we declared the war on drugs in this country than we gutted much of what we did 5 months earlier by reducing State and local assistance programs, cutting programs such as the Coast Guard.

The Coast Guard now is operating at about 55-percent capacity in their interdiction because we, we, this House and the other body cut the Coast Guard budget by about $105 million. They are still about $60 million short even with this reprogramming. And it is the Coast Guard that is our first line of defense on the high seas in trying to interdict traffickers in this country.

So I say to my colleagues I think it is important that we instruct conferees but it is also important that we remember as we vote upon these issues for our Justice Department and their appropriations, and we vote on our budgets, that we allow sufficient money to fund our law enforcement agencies, to fund education and other demand-reduction programs and we have not done that.

So while it is an election year again and once again everybody is going to jump on the bandwagon and be against drugs, I just say to my colleagues we need to have some degree of consistency.

The roller coaster type of funding that we have seen in this whole drug area is just inexcusable. Unfortunately it has been this body and the other body which have caused much of that problem.

You know, it is easy to jump on the administration and blame the administration for the fact that we do not have resources. But unfortunately we have been less than a good partner with those at the local level, State and local police officials, in trying to derive and develop strategies and resources that would do something about what I consider to be the Nation's No. 1 problem, substance abuse.

Once again I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

TITLE I—TRADE, CUSTOMS, AND TARIFF LAWS

SEC. 1001. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) in the last 10 years there has arisen a new global economy in which trade, technological development, investment, and services form an integrated system; and in this system these activities affect each other and the health of the United States economy;

(2) the United States is confronted with a fundamental disequilibrium in its trade and current account balances and a rapid increase in its net external debt;

(3) such disequilibrium and increase are a result of numerous factors, including—

(A) disparities between the macroeconomic policies of the major trading nations,

(B) the large United States budget deficit,

(C) instabilities and structural defects in the world monetary system,

(D) the growth of debt throughout the developing world,

(E) structural defects in the world trading system and inadequate enforcement of trade agreement obligations,

(F) governmental distortions and barriers,

(G) serious shortcomings in United States trade policy, and

(H) inadequate growth in the productivity and competitiveness of United States firms and industries relative to their overseas competition;

(4) it is essential, and should be the highest priority of the United States Government, to pursue a broad array of domestic and international policies—

(A) to prevent future declines in the United States economy and standards of living,

(B) to ensure future stability in external trade of the United States, and

(C) to guarantee the continued vitality of the technological, industrial, and agricultural base of the United States;

(5) the President should be authorized and encouraged to negotiate trade agreements and related investment, financial, intellectual property, and services agreements that meet the standards set forth in this title; and

(6) while the United States is not in a position to dictate economic policy to the rest of the world, the United States is in a position to lead the world and it is in the national interest for the United States to do so.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this title are to—

(1) authorize the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements;

(2) strengthen United States trade laws;

(3) improve the development and management of United States trade strategy; and

(4) through these actions, improve standards of living in the world.

Subtitle A—United States Trade Agreements

PART 1—NEGOTIATION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF TRADE AGREEMENTS

SEC. 1101. OVERALL AND PRINCIPAL TRADE NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.

(a) OVERALL TRADE NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.—The overall trade negotiating objectives of the United States are to obtain—

(1) more open, equitable, and reciprocal market access;

(2) the reduction or elimination of barriers and other trade-distorting policies and practices; and

(3) a more effective system of international trading disciplines and procedures.

(b) PRINCIPAL TRADE NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.—

(1) DISPUTE SETTLEMENT.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to dispute settlement are—

(A) to provide for more effective and expeditious dispute settlement mechanisms and procedures; and

(B) to ensure that such mechanisms within the GATT and GATT agreements provide for more effective and expeditious resolution of disputes and enable better enforcement of United States rights.

(2) IMPROVEMENT OF THE GATT AND MULTILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding the improvement of GATT and multilateral trade negotiation agreements are—

(A) to enhance the status of the GATT;

(B) to improve the operation and extend the coverage of the GATT and such agreements and arrangements to products, sectors, and conditions of trade not adequately covered; and

(C) to expand country participation in particular agreements or arrangements, where appropriate.

(3) TRANSPARENCY.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States regarding transparency is to obtain broader application of the principle of transparency and clarification of the costs and benefits of trade policy actions through the observance of open and equitable procedures in trade matters by Contracting Parties to the GATT.

(4) DEVELOPING COUNTRIES.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding developing countries are—

(A) to ensure that developing countries promote economic development by assuming the fullest possible measure of responsibility for achieving and maintaining an open international trading system by providing reciprocal benefits and assuming equivalent obligations with respect to their import and export practices; and

(B) to establish procedures for reducing nonreciprocal trade benefits for the more advanced developing countries.

(5) CURRENT ACCOUNT SURPLUSES.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States regarding current account surpluses is to develop rules to address large and persistent global current account imbalances of countries, including imbalances which threaten the stability of the international trading system, by imposing greater responsibility on such countries to undertake policy changes aimed at restoring current account equilibrium, including expedited implementation of trade agreements where feasible and appropriate.

(6) TRADE AND MONETARY COORDINATION.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States regarding trade and monetary coordination is to develop mechanisms to assure greater coordination, consistency, and cooperation between international trade and monetary systems and institutions.

(7) AGRICULTURE.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to agriculture are to achieve, on an expedited basis to the maximum extent feasible, more open and fair conditions of trade in agricultural commodities by—

(A) developing, strengthening, and clarifying rules for agricultural trade, including disciplines on restrictive or trade-distorting import and export practices;

(B) increasing United States agricultural exports by eliminating barriers to trade (including transparent and nontransparent barriers) and reducing or eliminating the subsidization of agricultural production consistent with the United States policy of agricultural stabilization in cyclical and unpredictable markets;

(C) creating a free and more open world agricultural trading system by resolving questions pertaining to export and other trade-distorting subsidies, market pricing and market access and eliminating and reducing substantially other specific constraints to fair trade and more open market access, such as tariffs, quotas, and other nontariff practices, including unjustified phytosanitary and sanitary restrictions; and

(D) seeking agreements by which the major agricultural exporting nations agree to pursue policies to reduce excessive production of agricultural commodities during periods of oversupply, with due regard for the fact that the United States already undertakes such policies, and without recourse to arbitrary schemes to divide market shares among major exporting countries.

(8) UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to unfair trade practices are—

(A) to improve the provisions of the GATT and nontariff measure agreements in order to define, deter, discourage the persistent use of, and otherwise discipline unfair trade practices having adverse trade effects, including forms of subsidy and dumping and other practices not adequately covered such as resource input subsidies, diversionary dumping, dumped or subsidized inputs, and export targeting practices;

(B) to obtain the application of similar rules to the treatment of primary and nonprimary products in the Agreement on Interpretation and Application of Articles VI, XVI, and XXIII of the GATT (relating to subsidies and countervailing measures); and

(C) to obtain the enforcement of GATT rules against—

(i) state trading enterprises, and

(ii) the acts, practices, or policies of any foreign government which, as a practical matter, unreasonably require that—

(I) substantial direct investment in the foreign country be made,

(II) intellectual property be licensed to the foreign country or to any firm of the foreign country, or

(III) other collateral concessions be made, as a condition for the importation of any product or service of the United States into the foreign country or as a condition for carrying on business in the foreign country.

(9) TRADE IN SERVICES.—

(A) The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding trade in services are—

(i) to reduce or to eliminate barriers to, or other distortions of, international trade in services, including barriers that deny national treatment and restrictions on establishment and operation in such markets; and

(ii) to develop internationally agreed rules, including dispute settlement procedures, which—

(I) are consistent with the commercial policies of the United States, and

(II) will reduce or eliminate such barriers or distortions, and help ensure fair, equitable opportunities for foreign markets.

(B) In pursuing the negotiating objectives described in subparagraph (A), United States negotiators shall take into account legitimate United States domestic objectives including, but not limited to, the protection of legitimate health or safety, essential security, environmental, consumer or employment opportunity interests and the law and regulations related thereto.

(10) INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding intellectual property are—

(A) to seek the enactment and effective enforcement by foreign countries of laws which—

(i) recognize and adequately protect intellectual property, including copyrights, patents, trademarks, semiconductor chip layout designs, and trade secrets, and

(ii) provide protection against unfair competition,

(B) to establish in the GATT obligations—

(i) to implement adequate substantive standards based on—

(I) the standards in existing international agreements that provide adequate protection, and

(II) the standards in national laws if international agreement standards are inadequate or do not exist,

(ii) to establish effective procedures to enforce, both internally and at the border, the standards implemented under clause (i), and

(iii) to implement effective dispute settlement procedures that improve on existing GATT procedures;

(C) to recognize that the inclusion in the GATT of—

(i) adequate and effective substantive norms and standards for the protection and enforcement of intellectual property rights, and

(ii) dispute settlement provisions and enforcement procedures, is without prejudice to other complementary initiatives undertaken in other international organizations; and

(D) to supplement and strengthen standards for protection and enforcement in existing international intellectual property conventions administered by other international organizations, including their expansion to cover new and emerging technologies and elimination of discrimination or unreasonable exceptions or preconditions to protection.

(11) FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT.—

(A) The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding foreign direct investment are—

(i) to reduce or to eliminate artificial or trade-distorting barriers to foreign direct investment, to expand the principle of national treatment, and to reduce unreasonable barriers to establishment; and

(ii) to develop internationally agreed rules, including dispute settlement procedures, which—

(I) will help ensure a free flow of foreign direct investment, and

(II) will reduce or eliminate the trade distortive effects of certain trade-related investment measures.

(B) In pursuing the negotiating objectives described in subparagraph (A), United States negotiators shall take into account legitimate United States domestic objectives including, but not limited to, the protection of legitimate health or safety, essential security, environmental, consumer or employment opportunity interests and the law and regulations related thereto.

(12) SAFEGUARDS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding safeguards are—

(A) to improve and expand rules and procedures covering safeguard measures;

(B) to ensure that safeguard measures are—

(i) transparent,

(ii) temporary,

(iii) degressive, and

(iv) subject to review and termination when no longer necessary to remedy injury and to facilitate adjustment; and

(C) to require notification of, and to monitor the use by, GATT Contracting Parties of import relief actions for their domestic industries.

(13) SPECIFIC BARRIERS.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States regarding specific barriers is to obtain competitive opportunities for United States exports in foreign markets substantially equivalent to the competitive opportunities afforded foreign exports to United States markets, including the reduction or elimination of specific tariff and nontariff trade barriers, particularly—

(A) measures identified in the annual report prepared under section 181 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2241); and

(B) foreign tariffs and nontariff barriers on competitive United States exports when like or similar products enter the United States at low rates of duty or are duty-free, and other tariff disparities that impede access to particular export markets.

(14) WORKER RIGHTS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding worker rights are—

(A) to promote respect for worker rights;

(B) to secure a review of the relationship of worker rights to GATT articles, objectives, and related instruments with a view to ensuring that the benefits of the trading system are available to all workers; and

(C) to adopt, as a principle of the GATT, that the denial of worker rights should not be a means for a country or its industries to gain competitive advantage in international trade.

(15) ACCESS TO HIGH TECHNOLOGY.—

(A) The principal negotiating objective of the United States regarding access to high technology is to obtain the elimination or reduction of foreign barriers to, and acts, policies, or practices by foreign governments which limit, equitable access by United States persons to foreign-developed technology, including barriers, acts, policies, or practices which have the effect of—

(i) restricting the participation of United States persons in government-supported research and development projects;

(ii) denying equitable access by United States persons to government-held patents;

(iii) requiring the approval or agreement of government entities, or imposing other forms of government interventions, as a condition for the granting of licenses to United States persons by foreign persons (except for approval or agreement which may be necessary for national security purposes to control the export of critical military technology); and

(iv) otherwise denying equitable access by United States persons to foreign-developed technology or contributing to the inequitable flow of technology between the United States and its trading partners.

(B) In pursuing the negotiating objective described in subparagraph (A), the United States negotiators shall take into account United States Government policies in licensing or otherwise making available to foreign persons technology and other information developed by United States laboratories.

(16) BORDER TAXES.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States regarding border taxes is to obtain a revision of the GATT with respect to the treatment of border adjustments for internal taxes to redress the disadvantage to countries relying primarily for revenue on direct taxes rather than indirect taxes.

SEC. 1102. TRADE AGREEMENT NEGOTIATING AUTHORITY.

(a) AGREEMENTS REGARDING TARIFF BARRIERS.—

(1) Whenever the President determines that one or more existing duties or other import restrictions of any foreign country or the United States are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States and that the purposes, policies, and objectives of this title will be promoted thereby, the President—

(A) before June 1, 1993, may enter into trade agreements with foreign countries; and

(B) may, subject to paragraphs (2) through (5), proclaim—

(i) such modification or continuance of any existing duty,

(ii) such continuance of existing duty-free or excise treatment, or

(iii) such additional duties;

as he determines to be required or appropriate to carry out any such trade agreement.

(2) No proclamation may be made under subsection (a) that—

(A) reduces any rate of duty (other than a rate of duty that does not exceed 5 percent ad valorem on the date of enactment of this Act) to a rate which is less than 50 percent of the rate of such duty that applies on such date of enactment; or

(B) increases any rate of duty above the rate that applies on such date of enactment.

(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the aggregate reduction in the rate of duty on any article which is in effect on any day pursuant to a trade agreement entered into under paragraph (1) shall not exceed the aggregate reduction which would have been in effect on such day if a reduction of 3 percent ad valorem or a reduction of one-tenth of the total reduction, whichever is greater, had taken effect on the effective date of the first reduction proclaimed in paragraph (1) to carry out such agreement with respect to such article.

(B) No staging under subparagraph (A) is required with respect to a rate reduction that is proclaimed under paragraph (1) for an article of a kind that is not produced in the United States. The United States International Trade Commission shall advise the President of the identity of articles that may be exempted from staging under this subparagraph.

(4) If the President determines that such action will simplify the computation of reductions under paragraph (3), the President may round an annual reduction by the lesser of—

(A) the difference between the reduction without regard to this paragraph and the next lower whole number; or

(B) one-half of 1 percent ad valorem.

(5) No reduction in a rate of duty under a trade agreement entered into under subsection (a) on any article may take effect more than 10 years after the effective date of the first reduction under paragraph (1) that is proclaimed to carry out the trade agreement with respect to such article.

(6) A rate of duty reduction or increase that may not be proclaimed by reason of paragraph (2) may take effect only if a provision authorizing such reduction or increase is included within an implementing bill provided for under section 1103 and that bill is enacted into law.

(b) Agreements Regarding Nontariff Barriers.—

(1) Whenever the President determines that any barrier to, or other distortion of, international trade—

(A) unduly burdens or restricts the foreign trade of the United States or adversely affects the United States economy; or

(B) the imposition of any such barrier or distortion is likely to result in such a burden, restriction, or effect; and that the purposes, policies, and objectives of this title will be promoted thereby, the President may, before June 1, 1993, enter into a trade agreement with foreign countries providing for—

(i) the reduction or elimination of such barrier or other distortion; or

(ii) the prohibition of, or limitations on the imposition of, such barrier or other distortion.

(2) A trade agreement may be entered into under this subsection only if such agreement makes progress in meeting the applicable objectives described in section 1101.

(c) Bilateral Agreements Regarding Tariff and Nontariff Barriers.—

(1) Before June 1, 1993, the President may enter into bilateral trade agreements with foreign countries that provide for the elimination or reduction of any duty imposed by the United States. A trade agreement entered into under this paragraph may also provide for the reduction or elimination of barriers to, or other distortions of, the international trade of the foreign country or the United States.

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no trade benefit shall be extended to any country by reason of the extension of any trade benefit to another country under a trade agreement entered into under paragraph (1) with such other country.

(3) A trade agreement may be entered into under paragraph (1) with any foreign country only if—

(A) the agreement makes progress in meeting the applicable objectives described in section 1101;

(B) such foreign country requests the negotiation of such an agreement; and

(C) the President, at least 60 days before the date notice is provided under section 1103(a)(1)(A)—

(i) provides written notice of such negotiations to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and

(ii) consults with such committees regarding the negotiation of such agreement.

(4) The 60-day period of time described in paragraph (3)(B) shall be computed in accordance with section 1103(f).

(5) In any case in which there is an inconsistency between any provision of this Act and any bilateral free trade area agreement that entered into force and effect with respect to the United States before January 1, 1987, the provision shall not apply with respect to the foreign country that is party to that agreement.

(d) Consultation With Congress Before Agreements Entered Into.—

(1) Before the President enters into any trade agreement under subsection (b) or (c), the President shall consult with—

(A) the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate; and

(B) each other committee of the House and the Senate, and each joint committee of the Congress, which has jurisdiction over legislation involving subject matters which would be affected by the trade agreement.

(2) The consultation under paragraph (1) shall include—

(A) the nature of the agreement;

(B) how and to what extent the agreement will achieve the applicable purposes, policies, and objectives of this title; and

(C) all matters relating to the implementation of the agreement under section 1103.

(3) If it is proposed to implement two or more trade agreements in a single implementing bill under section 1103, the consultation under paragraph (1) shall include the desirability and feasibility of such proposed implementation.

SEC. 1103. IMPLEMENTATION OF TRADE AGREEMENTS.

(a) In General.—

(1) Any agreement entered into under section 1102(b) or (c) shall enter into force with respect to the United States if (and only if)—

(A) the President, at least 90 calendar days before the day on which he enters into the trade agreement, notifies the House of Representatives and the Senate of his intention to enter into the agreement, and promptly thereafter publishes notice of such intention in the Federal Register;

(B) after entering into the agreement, the President submits a document to the House of Representatives and to the Senate containing a copy of the final legal text of the agreement, together with—

(i) a draft of an implementing bill,

(ii) a statement of any administrative action proposed to implement the trade agreement, and

(iii) the supporting information described in paragraph (2); and

(C) the implementing bill is enacted into law.

(2) The supporting information required under paragraph (1)(B)(iii) consists of—

(A) an explanation as to how the implementing bill and proposed administrative action will change or affect existing law; and

(B) a statement—

(i) asserting that the agreement makes progress in achieving the applicable purposes, policies, and objectives of this title,

(ii) setting forth the reasons of the President regarding—

(I) how and to what extent the agreement makes progress in achieving the applicable purposes, policies, and objectives referred to in clause (i), and why and to what extent the agreement does not achieve other applicable purposes, policies, and objectives,

(II) how the agreement serves the interests of United States commerce, and

(III) why the implementing bill and proposed administrative action is required or appropriate to carry out the agreement;

(iii) describing the efforts made by the President to obtain international exchange rate equilibrium and any effect the agreement may have regarding increased international monetary stability; and

(iv) describing the extent, if any, to which—

(I) each foreign country that is a party to the agreement maintains non-commercial state trading enterprises that may adversely affect, nullify, or impair the benefits to the United States under the agreement, and

(II) the agreement applies to or affects purchases and sales by such enterprises.

(3) To ensure that a foreign country which receives benefits under a trade agreement entered into under section 1102(b) or (c) is subject to the obligations imposed by such agreement, the President shall recommend to Congress in the implementing bill and statement of administrative action submitted with respect to such agreement that the benefits and obligations of such agreement apply solely to the parties to such agreement, if such application is consistent with the terms of such agreement. The President may also recommend with respect to any such agreement that the benefits and obligations of such agreement not apply uniformly to all parties to such agreement, if such application is consistent with the terms of such agreement.

(b) Application of Congressional "Fast Track" Procedures to Implementing Bills.—

(1) Except as provided in subsection (c)—

(A) the provisions of section 151 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2191) (hereinafter in this section referred to as "fast track procedures") apply to implementing bills submitted with respect to trade agreements entered into under section 1102 (b) or (c) before June 1, 1991; and

(B) such fast track procedures shall be extended to implementing bills submitted with respect to trade agreements entered into under section 1102 (b) or (c) after May 31, 1991, and before June 1, 1993, if (and only if)—

(i) the President requests such extension under paragraph (2); and

(ii) neither House of the Congress adopts an extension disapproval resolution under paragraph (5) before June 1, 1991.

(2) If the President is of the opinion that the fast track procedures should be extended to implementing bills described in paragraph (1)(B), the President must submit to the Congress, no later than March 1, 1991, a written report that contains a request for such extension, together with—

(A) a description of all trade agreements that have been negotiated under section 1102 (b) or (c) and the anticipated schedule for submitting such agreements to the Congress for approval;

(B) a description of the progress that has been made in multilateral and bilateral negotiations to achieve the purposes, policies, and objectives of this title, and a statement that such progress justifies the continuation of negotiations; and

(C) a statement of the reasons why the extension is needed to complete the negotiations.

(3) The President shall promptly inform the Advisory Committee for Trade Policy and Negotiations established under section 135 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2155) of his decision to submit a report to Congress under paragraph (2). The Advisory Committee shall submit to the Congress as soon as practicable, but no later than March 1, 1991, a written report that contains—

(A) its views regarding the progress that has been made in multilateral and bilateral negotiations to achieve the purposes, policies, and objectives of this title; and

(B) a statement of its views, and the reasons therefor, regarding whether the extension requested under paragraph (2) should be approved or disapproved.

(4) The reports submitted to the Congress under paragraphs (2) and (3), or any portion of the reports, may be classified to the extent the President determines appropriate.

(5)(A) For purposes of this subsection, the term "extension disapproval resolution" means a resolution of either House of the Congress, the sole matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That the   disapproves the request of the President for the extension, under section 1103(b)(1)(B)(i) of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988, of the provisions of section 151 of the Trade Act of 1974 to any implementing bill submitted with respect to any trade agreement entered into under section 1102 (b) or (c) of such Act after May 31, 1991, because sufficient tangible progress has not been made in trade negotiations.", with the blank space being filled with the name of the resolving House of the Congress.

(B) Extension disapproval resolutions—

(i) may be introduced in either House of the Congress by any member of such House; and

(ii) shall be jointly referred, in the House of Representatives, to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Rules.

(C) The provisions of sections 152 (d) and (e) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2192 (d) and (e)) (relating to the floor consideration of certain resolutions in the House and Senate) apply to extension disapproval resolutions.

(D) It is not in order for—

(i) the Senate to consider any extension disapproval resolution not reported by the Committee on Finance;

(ii) the House of Representatives to consider any extension disapproval resolution not reported by the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Rules; or

(iii) either House of the Congress to consider an extension disapproval resolution that is reported to such House after May 15, 1991.

(c) LIMITATIONS ON USE OF "FAST TRACK" PROCEDURES.—

(1)(A) The fast track procedures shall not apply to any implementing bill submitted with respect to a trade agreement entered into under section 1102(b) or (c) if both Houses of the Congress separately agree to procedural disapproval resolutions within any 60-day period.

(B) Procedural disapproval resolutions—

(i) in the House of Representatives—

(I) shall be introduced by the chairman or ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means or the chairman or ranking minority member of the Committee on Rules,

(II) shall be jointly referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Rules, and

(III) may not be amended by either Committee; and

(ii) in the Senate shall be original resolutions of the Committee on Finance.

(C) The provisions of section 152(d) and (e) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2192(d) and (e)) (relating to the floor consideration of certain resolutions in the House and Senate) apply to procedural disapproval resolutions.

(D) It is not in order for the House of Representatives to consider any procedural disapproval resolution not reported by the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Rules.

(b) GENERALIZED SYSTEM OF PREFERENCES CONVERSION.—

(1) The review of the proposed conversion of the Generalized System of Preferences program to the Convention tariff nomenclature, initiated by the Office of the United States Trade Representative by notice published in the Federal Register on December 8, 1986 (at page 44,163 of volume 51 thereof), shall be treated as satisfying the requirements of sections 503(a) and 504(c)(3) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2463(a), 2464(c)(3)).

the President may proclaim changes in Additional U.S. Note 2, chapter 17 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule to conform that note to the fullest extent possible to headnote 2 of subpart A of part 10 of schedule 1 of the old Schedules.

(B) At the earliest practicable date after the effective date of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule, the Commission shall initiate an investigation under section 332 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1332) of those final judicial decisions referred to in subparagraph (A) that—

(i) are published during the 2-year period beginning on February 1, 1988; and

(ii) would have affected tariff treatment if they had been published during the period of the conversion of the old Schedules into the format of the Convention.

No later than September 1, 1990, the Commission shall report the results of the investigation to the President, the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Committee on Finance, and shall recommend those changes to the Harmonized Tariff Schedule that the Commission would have recommended if the final decisions concerned had been made before the conversion into the format of the Convention occurred.

(3) The President shall review all changes recommended by the Commission under paragraph (2)(B) and shall, as soon as practicable, proclaim such of those changes, if any, which he decides are necessary or appropriate to conform such Schedule to the final judicial decisions. Any such change shall be effective with respect to—

(A) entries made on or after the date of such proclamation; and

(B) entries made on or after the effective date of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule if, notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1514), application for liquidation or reliquidation thereof is made by the importer to the customs officer concerned within 180 days after the effective date of such proclamation.

(4) If any protest or petition referred to in paragraph (1)(A) is not sustained in whole or in part by a final judicial decision, the entries subject to that petition or protest and made before the effective date of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule shall be liquidated or reliquidated, as appropriate, in accordance with the final judicial decision under the old Schedules.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 1 of title III of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2411. et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 1—ENFORCEMENT OF UNITED STATES RIGHTS UNDER TRADE AGREEMENTS AND RESPONSE TO CERTAIN FOREIGN TRADE PRACTICES

"SEC. 301. ACTIONS BY UNITED STATES TRADE REPRESENTATIVE.

"(a) MANDATORY ACTION.—

"(1) If the United States Trade Representative determines under section 304(a)(1) that—

"(A) the rights of the United States under any trade agreement are being denied; or

"(B) an act, policy, or practice of a foreign country—

"(i) violates, or is inconsistent with, the provisions of, or otherwise denies benefits to the United States under, any trade agreement, or

"(ii) is unjustifiable and burdens or restricts United States commerce;

the Trade Representative shall take action authorized in subsection (c), subject to the specific direction, if any, of the President regarding any such action, and shall take all other appropriate and feasible action within the power of the President that the President may direct the Trade Representative to take under this subsection, to enforce such rights or to obtain the elimination of such act, policy, or practice.

"(2) The Trade Representative is not required to take action under paragraph (1) in any case in which—

"(A) the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade have determined, a panel of experts has reported to the Contracting Parties, or a ruling issued under the formal dispute settlement proceeding provided under any other trade agreement finds, that—

"(i) the rights of the United States under a trade agreement are not being denied, or

"(ii) the act, policy, or practice—

"(I) is not a violation of, or inconsistent with, the rights of the United States, or

"(II) does not deny, nullify, or impair benefits to the United States under any trade agreement; or

"(B) the Trade Representative finds that—

"(i) the foreign country is taking satisfactory measures to grant the rights of the United States under a trade agreement,

"(ii) the foreign country has—

"(I) agreed to eliminate or phase out the act, policy, or practice, or

"(II) agreed to an imminent solution to the burden or restriction on United States commerce that is satisfactory to the Trade Representative,

"(iii) it is impossible for the foreign country to achieve the results described in clause (i) or (ii), as appropriate, but the foreign country agrees to provide to the United States compensatory trade benefits that are satisfactory to the Trade Representative,

"(iv) in extraordinary cases, where the taking of action under this subsection would have an adverse impact on the United States economy substantially out of proportion to the benefits of such action, taking into account the impact of not taking such action on the credibility of the provisions of this chapter, or

"(v) the taking of action under this subsection would cause serious harm to the national security of the United States.

"(3) Any action taken under paragraph (1) to eliminate an act, policy, or practice shall be devised so as to affect goods or services of the foreign country in an amount that is equivalent in value to the burden or restriction being imposed by that country on United States commerce.

"(b) DISCRETIONARY ACTION.—If the Trade Representative determines under section 304(a)(1) that—

"(1) an act, policy, or practice of a foreign country is unreasonable or discriminatory and burdens or restricts United States commerce, and

"(2) action by the United States is appropriate, the Trade Representative shall take all appropriate and feasible action authorized under subsection (c), subject to the specific direction, if any, of the President regarding any such action, and all other appropriate and feasible action within the power of the President that the President may direct the Trade Representative to take under this subsection, to obtain the elimination of that act, policy, or practice.

"(c) SCOPE OF AUTHORITY.—

"(1) For purposes of carrying out the provisions of subsection (a) or (b), the Trade Representative is authorized to—

"(A) suspend, withdraw, or prevent the application of, benefits of trade agreement concessions to carry out a trade agreement with the foreign country referred to in such subsection;

"(B) impose duties or other import restrictions on the goods of, and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, fees or restrictions on the services of, such foreign country for such time as the Trade Representative determines appropriate; or

"(C) enter into binding agreements with such foreign country that commit such foreign country to—

"(i) eliminate, or phase out, the act, policy, or practice that is the subject of the action to be taken under subsection (a) or (b),

"(ii) eliminate any burden or restriction on United States commerce resulting from such act, policy, or practice, or

"(iii) provide the United States with compensatory trade benefits that—

"(I) are satisfactory to the Trade Representative, and

"(II) meet the requirements of paragraph (4).

"(2)(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of law governing any service sector access authorization, and in addition to the authority conferred in paragraph (1), the Trade Representative may, for purposes of carrying out the provisions of subsection (a) or (b)—

"(i) restrict, in the manner and to the extent the Trade Representative determines appropriate, the terms and conditions of any such authorization, or

"(ii) deny the issuance of any such authorization.

"(B) Actions described in subparagraph (A) may only be taken under this section with respect to service sector access authorizations granted, or applications therefor pending, on or after the date on which—

"(i) a petition is filed under section 302(a), or

"(ii) a determination to initiate an investigation is made by the Trade Representative under 302(b).

"(C) Before the Trade Representative takes any action under this section involving the imposition of fees or other restrictions on the services of a foreign country, the Trade Representative shall, if the services involved are subject to regulation by any agency of the Federal Government or of any State, consult, as appropriate, with the head of the agency concerned.

"(3) The actions the Trade Representative is authorized to take under subsection (a) or (b) may be taken against any goods or economic sector—

"(A) on a nondiscriminatory basis or solely against the foreign country described in such subsection, and

"(B) without regard to whether or not such goods or economic sector were involved in the act, policy, or practice that is the subject of such action.

"(4) Any trade agreement described in paragraph (1)(C)(iii) shall provide compensatory trade benefits that benefit the economic sector which includes the domestic industry that would benefit from the elimination of the act, policy, or practice that is the subject of the action to be taken under subsection (a) or (b), or benefit the economic sector as closely related as possible to such economic sector, unless—

"(A) the provision of such trade benefits is not feasible, or

"(B) trade benefits that benefit any other economic sector would be more satisfactory than such trade benefits.

"(5) In taking actions under subsection (a) or (b), the Trade Representative shall—

"(A) give preference to the imposition of duties over the imposition of other import restrictions, and

"(B) if an import restriction other than a duty is imposed, consider substituting, on an incremental basis, an equivalent duty for such other import restriction.

"(6) Any action taken by the Trade Representative under this section with respect to export targeting shall, to the extent possible, reflect the full benefit level of the export targeting to the beneficiary over the period during which the action taken has an effect.

"(II) denies workers the right to organize and bargain collectively,

"(II) such acts, policies, and practices are not inconsistent with the level of economic development of the foreign country.

"(B) The Trade Representative shall, before making any determination under subparagraph (A), consult with appropriate committees established pursuant to section 135.

"(2)(A) By no later than the date that is 30 days after the date on which a country is identified under section 182(a)(2), the Trade Representative shall initiate an investigation under this chapter with respect to any act, policy, or practice of that country that—

"(ii) is not at that time the subject of any other investigation or action under this chapter.

"(B) The Trade Representative is not required under subparagraph (A) to initiate an investigation under this chapter with respect to any act, policy, or practice of a foreign country if the Trade Representative determines that the initiation of the investigation would be detrimental to United States economic interests.

"(C) If the Trade Representative makes a determination under subparagraph (B) not to initiate an investigation, the Trade Representative shall submit to the Congress a written report setting forth, in detail—

"(i) the reasons for the determination, and

"(ii) the United States economic interests that would be adversely affected by the investigation.

"(a) In General.—

"(1) On the date on which an investigation is initiated under section 302, the Trade Representative, on behalf of the United States, shall request consultations with the foreign country concerned regarding the issues involved in such investigation.

"SEC. 310. IDENTIFICATION OF TRADE LIBERALIZATION PRIORITIES.

"(a) IDENTIFICATION.—

"(1) By no later than the date that is 30 days after the date in calendar year 1989, and also the date in calendar year 1990, on which the report required under section 181(b) is submitted to the appropriate Congressional committees, the Trade Representative shall identify United States trade liberalization priorities, including—

"(A) priority practices, including major barriers and trade distorting practices, the elimination of which are likely to have the most significant potential to increase United States exports, either directly or through the establishment of a beneficial precedent;

"(B) priority foreign countries that, on the basis of such report, satisfy the criteria in paragraph (2);

"(C) estimate the total amount by which United States exports of goods and services to each foreign country identified under subparagraph (B) would have increased during the preceding calendar year if the priority practices of such country identified under subparagraph (A) did not exist; and

"(D) submit to the Committee on Finance of the Senate, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and publish in the Federal Register, a report which lists—

"(i) the priority foreign countries identified under subparagraph (B),

"(ii) the priority practices identified under subparagraph (A) with respect to each of such priority foreign countries, and

"(iii) the amount estimated under subparagraph (C) with respect to each of such priority foreign countries.

"(2) In identifying priority foreign countries under paragraph (1)(B), the Trade Representative shall take into account—

"(A) the number and pervasiveness of the acts, policies, and practices described in section 181(a)(1)(A), and

"(B) the level of United States exports of goods and services that would be reasonably expected from full implementation of existing trade agreements to which that foreign country is a party, based on the international competitive position and export potential of such products and services.

"(3) In identifying priority practices under paragraph (1)(A), the Trade Representative shall take into account—

"(A) the international competitive position and export potential of United States products and services,

"(B) circumstances in which the sale of a small quantity of a product or service may be more significant than its value, and

"(C) the measurable medium-term and long-term implications of government procurement commitments to United States exporters.

"(b) INITIATION OF INVESTIGATIONS.—By no later than the date that is 21 days after the date on which a report is submitted to the appropriate Congressional committees under subsection (a)(1)(D), the Trade Representative shall initiate under section 302(b)(1) investigations under this chapter with respect to all of those priority practices identified in such report by reason of subsection (a)(1)(D) for each of the priority foreign countries. The Trade Representative may initiate investigations under section 302(b)(1) with respect to all other priority practices identified under subsection (a)(1)(A).

"(c) AGREEMENTS FOR THE ELIMINATION OF BARRIERS.—

"(1) In the consultations with a priority foreign country identified under subsection (a)(1) that the Trade Representative is required to request under section 303(a) with respect to an investigation initiated by reason of subsection (b), the Trade Representative shall seek to negotiate an agreement which provides for—

"(A) the elimination of, or compensation for, the priority practices identified under subsection (a)(1)(A) by no later than the close of the 3-year period beginning on the date on which such investigation is initiated, and

"(B) the reduction of such practices over a 3-year period with the expectation that United States exports to the foreign country will, as a result, increase incrementally during each year within such 3-year period.

"(2) Any investigation initiated under this chapter by reason of subsection (b) shall be suspended if an agreement described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) is entered into with the foreign country before the date on which any action under section 301 with respect to such investigation may be required under section 305(a) to be implemented.

"(3) If an agreement described in paragraph (1) is entered into with a foreign country before the date on which any action under section 301 with respect to such investigation may be required under section 305(a) to be implemented and the Trade Representative determines that the foreign country is not in compliance with such agreement, the Trade Representative shall continue the investigation that was suspended by reason of such agreement as though such investigation had not been suspended.

"(d) Annual Reports.—

"(1) On the date on which the report the Trade Representative is required to submit under subsection (a)(1)(D) in calendar year 1990, and on the anniversary of such date in the succeeding calendar years, the Trade Representative shall submit a report which includes—

"(A) revised estimates of the total amount determined under subsection (a)(1)(C) for each priority foreign country that has been identified under subsection (a)(1)(B),

"(B) evidence that demonstrates, in the form of increased United States exports to each of such priority foreign countries during the previous calendar year—

"(i) in the case of a priority foreign country that has entered into an agreement described in subsection (c)(1), substantial progress during each year within the 3-year period described in subsection (c)(1)(A) toward the goal of eliminating the priority practices identified under subsection (a)(1)(A) by the close of such 3-year period, and

"(ii) in the case of a country which has not entered into (or has not complied with) an agreement described in subsection (c)(1), the elimination of such practices,

"(C) to the extent that the evidence described in subparagraph (B) cannot be provided, any actions that have been taken by the Trade Representative under section 301 with respect to such priority practices of each of such foreign countries.

"(2) The Trade Representative may exclude from the requirements of paragraph (1) in any calendar year beginning after 1993 any foreign country that has been identified under subsection (a)(1)(A) if the evidence submitted under paragraph (1)(B) in the 2 previous reports demonstrated that all the priority practices identified under subsection (a)(1)(A) with respect to such foreign country have been eliminated.".

(b) Conforming Amendment.—The table of contents for the Trade Act of 1974 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 309 the following new item:

"Sec. 310. Identification of trade liberalization priorities.".

SEC. 1303. IDENTIFICATION OF COUNTRIES THAT DENY ADEQUATE AND EFFECTIVE PROTECTION OF INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY RIGHTS.

(a) Findings and Purpose.—

(1) The Congress finds that—

(A) international protection of intellectual property rights is vital to the international competitiveness of United States persons that rely on protection of intellectual property rights; and

(B) the absence of adequate and effective protection of United States intellectual property rights, and the denial of fair and equitable market access, seriously impede the ability of the United States persons that rely on protection of intellectual property rights to export and operate overseas, thereby harming the economic interests of the United States.

(2) The purpose of this section is to provide for the development of an overall strategy to ensure adequate and effective protection of intellectual property rights and fair and equitable market access for United States persons that rely on protection of intellectual property rights.

(b) In General.—Chapter 8 of title I of the Trade Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 182. IDENTIFICATION OF COUNTRIES THAT DENY ADEQUATE PROTECTION, OR MARKET ACCESS, FOR INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY RIGHTS.

"(a) In General.—By no later than the date that is 30 days after the date on which the annual report is submitted to Congressional committees under section 181(b), the United States Trade Representative (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'Trade Representative') shall identify—

"(1) those foreign countries that—

"(A) deny adequate and effective protection of intellectual property rights, or

"(B) deny fair and equitable market access to United States persons that rely upon intellectual property protection, and

"(2) those foreign countries identified under paragraph (1) that are determined by the Trade Representative to be priority foreign countries.

"(b) Special Rules for Identifications.—

"(1) In identifying priority foreign countries under subsection (a)(2), the Trade Representative shall only identify those foreign countries—

"(A) that have the most onerous or egregious acts, policies, or practices that—"(i) deny adequate and effective intellectual property rights, or

"(ii) deny fair and equitable market access to United States persons that rely upon intellectual property protection,

"(B) whose acts, policies, or practices described in subparagraph (A) have the greatest adverse impact (actual or potential) on the relevant United States products, and

"(C) that are not—

"(i) entering into good faith negotiations, or

"(ii) making significant progress in bilateral or multilateral negotiations, to provide adequate and effective protection of intellectual property rights.

"(2) In identifying priority foreign countries under subsection (a)(2), the Trade Representative shall—

"(A) consult with the Register of Copyrights, the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks, other appropriate officers of the Federal Government, and

"(B) take into account information from such sources as may be available to the Trade Representative and such information as may be submitted to the Trade Representative by interested persons, including information contained in reports submitted under section 181(b) and petitions submitted under section 302.

"(3) The Trade Representative may identify a foreign country under subsection (a)(1)(B) only if the Trade Representative finds that there is a factual basis for the denial of fair and equitable market access as a result of the violation of international law or agreement, or the existence of barriers, referred to in subsection (d)(3).

"(c) Revocations and Additional Identifications.—

"(1) The Trade Representative may at any time—

"(A) revoke the identification of any foreign country as a priority foreign country under this section, or

"(B) identify any foreign country as a priority foreign country under this section, if information available to the Trade Representative indicates that such action is appropriate.

"(2) The Trade Representative shall include in the semiannual report submitted to the Congress under section 309(3) a detailed explanation of the reasons for the revocation under paragraph (1) of the identification of any foreign country as a priority foreign country under this section.

"(d) Definitions.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'persons that rely upon intellectual property protection' means persons involved in—

"(A) the creation, production or licensing of works of authorship (within the meaning of sections 102 and 103 of title 17, United States Code) that are copyrighted, or

"(B) the manufacture of products that are patented or for which there are process patents.

"(2) A foreign country denies adequate and effective protection of intellectual property rights if the foreign country denies adequate and effective means under the laws of the foreign country for persons who are not citizens or nationals of such foreign country to secure, exercise, and enforce rights relating to patents, process patents, registered trademarks, copyrights and mask works.

"(3) A foreign country denies fair and equitable market access if the foreign country effectively denies access to a market for a product protected by a copyright, patent, or process patent through the use of laws, procedures, practices, or regulations which—

"(A) violate provisions of international law or international agreements to which both the United States and the foreign country are parties, or

"(B) constitute discriminatory nontariff trade barriers.

"(e) Publication.—The Trade Representative shall publish in the Federal Register a list of foreign countries identified under subsection (a) and shall make such revisions to the list as may be required by reason of action under subsection (c).".

SEC. 1305. INVESTIGATION OF BARRIERS IN JAPAN TO CERTAIN UNITED STATES SERVICES.

The United States Trade Representative shall, within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, initiate an investigation under section 302 of the Trade Act of 1974 regarding those acts, policies, and practices of the Government of Japan, and of entities owned, financed, or otherwise controlled by the Government of Japan, that are barriers in Japan to the offering or performance by United States persons of architectural, engineering, construction, and consulting services in Japan.

SEC. 1306. TRADE AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS WITH JAPAN.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the United States is at a critical juncture in bilateral relations with Japan;

(2) the balance of trade between the United States and Japan has deteriorated steadily from an already large United States deficit of $10,400,000,000 in 1980 to an unprecedented United States deficit of $57,700,000,000 in 1987, a magnitude that is simply untenable;

(3) approximately 90 percent of the increase in total trade between the United States and Japan since 1980 has been in Japanese exports to the United States;

(4) United States exports to Japan have not significantly benefited from appreciation of the yen;

(5) the United States deficit in the balance of trade in manufactured goods is growing: in 1987 Japan exported $82,500,000,000 of manufactured goods to the United States, while the United States exported $14,600,000,000 in manufactured goods;

(6) Japan accounts for 49 percent of the worldwide deficit of the United States in the balance of trade in manufactured goods, calculated on a customs basis;

(7) our trade and economic relations with Japan are complex and cannot be effectively resolved through narrow sector-by-sector negotiations;

(8) a major problem between the United States and Japan is the absence of a political will in Japan to import; and

(9) meaningful negotiations must take place at the highest level, at a special summit of political leaders from both countries.

(b) SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.—

(1) It is the sense of the Congress that the President should propose to the Japanese Prime Minister that a special summit be held between the leaders of the United States and Japan for the purpose of—

(A) addressing trade and economic issues, and

(B) establishing—

(i) an agreement that provides objectives for improvement in trade and economic relations, and

(ii) targets for achieving these objectives.

(2) The delegation of the United States to the summit meeting described in subsection (a) should include—

(A) Members of Congress from both political parties, and

(B) appropriate officers of the Executive Branch of the United States Government.

(3) The delegation of Japan to the summit meeting described in subsection (a) should include—

(A) representatives of all political parties in Japan, and

(B) appropriate officers of the Government of Japan.

SEC. 1307. SUPERCOMPUTER TRADE DISPUTE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) United States manufacturers of supercomputers have encountered significant obstacles in selling supercomputers in Japan, particularly to government agencies and universities;

(2) Japanese government procurement policies and pricing practices have denied United States manufacturers access to the Japanese supercomputer market;

(3) it has been reported that officials of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry of Japan have told United States Government officials that Japanese government agencies and universities do not intend to purchase supercomputers from United States manufacturers, or take steps to improve access for United States manufacturers;

(4) the United States Government in August 1987 signed an agreement with the Government of Japan establishing procedures for the procurement of United States supercomputers by the Government of Japan;

(5) concern remains as to implementation of the procurement agreement by the Government of Japan;

(6) there have been allegations that Japanese manufacturers of supercomputers have been offering supercomputers at drastically discounted prices in the markets of the United States, Japan, and other countries;

(7) deep price discounting raises the concern that Japan's large-scale vertically integrated manufacturers of supercomputers have targeted the supercomputer industry with the objective of eventual domination of the global computer market; and

(8) the supercomputer industry plays a central role in the technological competitiveness and national security of the United States.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the United States Trade Representative and other appropriate officials of the United States Government should—

(1) give the highest priority to concluding and enforcing agreements with the Government of Japan which achieve improved market access for United States manufacturers of supercomputers and end any predatory pricing activities of Japanese companies in the United States, Japan, and other countries; and

(2) continue to monitor the efforts of United States manufacturers of supercomputers to gain access to the Japanese market, recognizing that the Government of Japan may continue to manipulate the government procurement process to maintain the market dominance of Japanese manufacturers.

PART 2—IMPROVEMENT IN THE ENFORCEMENT OF THE ANTIDUMPING AND COUNTERVAILING DUTY LAWS

SEC. 1311. REFERENCE TO TITLE VII OF THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930.

Unless otherwise provided, whenever in this part an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a subtitle, section, subsection, or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a subtitle, section, subsection, or other provision of title VII of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1671 et seq.).

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'subsidy' has the same meaning as the term 'bounty or grant' as that term is used in section 303, and includes, but is not limited to, the following:

"(i) Any export subsidy described in Annex A to the Agreement (relating to illustrative list of export subsidies).

"(ii) The following domestic subsidies, if provided or required by government action to a specific enterprise or industry, or group of enterprises or industries, whether publicly or privately owned and whether paid or bestowed directly or indirectly on the manufacture, production, or export of any class or kind of merchandise:

"(I) The provision of capital, loans, or loan guarantees on terms inconsistent with commercial considerations.

"(II) The provision of goods or services at preferential rates.

"(III) The grant of funds or forgiveness of debt to cover operating losses sustained by a specific industry.

"(IV) The assumption of any costs or expenses of manufacture, production, or distribution.

"(B) SPECIAL RULE.—In applying subparagraph (A), the administering authority, in each investigation, shall determine whether the bounty, grant, or subsidy in law or in fact is provided to a specific enterprise or industry, or group of enterprises or industries. Nominal general availability, under the terms of the law, regulation, program, or rule establishing a bounty, grant, or subsidy, of the benefits thereunder is not a basis for determining that the bounty, grant, or subsidy is not, or has not been, in fact provided to a specific enterprise or industry, or group thereof.".

SEC. 1313. CALCULATION OF SUBSIDIES ON CERTAIN PROCESSED AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title VII of the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by inserting after section 771A (19 U.S.C. 1677-1) the following new section:

"SEC. 771B. In the case of an agricultural product processed from a raw agricultural product in which (1) the demand for the prior stage product is substantially dependent on the demand for the latter stage product, and (2) the processing operation adds only limited value to the raw commodity, subsidies found to be provided to either producers or processors of the product shall be deemed to be provided with respect to the manufacture, production, or exportation of the processed product.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for title VII of the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 771A the following:

"Sec. 771B. Calculation of subsidies on certain processed agricultural products.".

Section 701 (19 U.S.C. 1671) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (d); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) REVOCATION OF STATUS AS A COUNTRY UNDER THE AGREEMENT.—The United States Trade Representative may revoke the status of a foreign country as a country under the Agreement for purposes of this subtitle if such foreign country—

"(1) announces that such foreign country does not intend, or is not able, to honor the obligations it has assumed with respect to the United States or the Agreement for purposes of this subtitle, or

"(2) does not in fact honor such obligations.".

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) TREATMENT OF INTERNATIONAL CONSORTIA.—

For purposes of this subtitle, if the members (or other participating entities) of an international consortium that is engaged in the production of a class or kind of merchandise subject to a countervailing duty investigation receive subsidies from their respective home countries to assist, permit, or otherwise enable their participation in that consortium through production or manufacturing operations in their respective home countries, then the administering authority shall cumulate all such subsidies, as well as subsidies provided directly to the international consortium, in determining any countervailing duty upon such merchandise.".

SEC. 1316. DUMPING BY NONMARKET ECONOMY COUNTRIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (c) of section 773 (19 U.S.C. 1677b) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) NONMARKET ECONOMY COUNTRIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) the merchandise under investigation is exported from a nonmarket economy country, and

"(B) the administering authority finds that available information does not permit the foreign market value of the merchandise to be determined under subsection (a), the administering authority shall determine the foreign market value of the merchandise on the basis of the value of the factors of production utilized in producing the merchandise and to which shall be added an amount for general expenses and profit plus the cost of containers, coverings, and other expenses, as required by subsection (e). Except as provided in paragraph (2), the valuation of the factors of production shall be based on the best available information regarding the values of such factors in a market economy country or countries considered to be appropriate by the administering authority.

"(2) EXCEPTION.—If the administering authority finds that the available information is inadequate for purposes of determining the foreign market value of merchandise under paragraph (1), the administering authority shall determine the foreign market value on the basis of the price at which merchandise that is—

"(A) comparable to the merchandise under investigation, and

"(B) produced in one or more market economy countries that are at a level of economic development comparable to that of the nonmarket economy country, is sold in other countries, including the United States.

"(3) FACTORS OF PRODUCTION.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the factors of production utilized in producing merchandise include, but are not limited to—

"(A) hours of labor required,

"(B) quantities of raw materials employed,

"(C) amounts of energy and other utilities consumed, and

"(D) representative capital cost, including depreciation.

"(4) VALUATION OF FACTORS OF PRODUCTION.—The administering authority, in valuing factors of production under paragraph (1), shall utilize, to the extent possible, the prices or costs of factors of production in one or more market economy countries that are—

"(A) at a level of economic development comparable to that of the nonmarket economy country, and

"(B) significant producers of comparable merchandise.".

(b) NONMARKET ECONOMY COUNTRY DEFINED.—Section 771 (19 U.S.C. 1677) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(18) NONMARKET ECONOMY COUNTRY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'nonmarket economy country' means any foreign country that the administering authority determines does not operate on market principles of cost or pricing structures, so that sales of merchandise in such country do not reflect the fair value of the merchandise.

"(B) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED.—In making determinations under subparagraph (A) the administering authority shall take into account—

"(i) the extent to which the currency of the foreign country is convertible into the currency of other countries;

"(ii) the extent to which wage rates in the foreign country are determined by free bargaining between labor and management,

"(iii) the extent to which joint ventures or other investments by firms of other foreign countries are permitted in the foreign country,

"(iv) the extent of government ownership or control of the means of production,

"(v) the extent of government control over the allocation of resources and over the price and output decisions of enterprises, and

"(vi) such other factors as the administering authority considers appropriate.

"(C) DETERMINATION IN EFFECT.—

"(i) Any determination that a foreign country is a nonmarket economy country shall remain in effect until revoked by the administering authority.

"(ii) The administering authority may make a determination under subparagraph (A) with respect to any foreign country at any time.

"(D) DETERMINATIONS NOT IN ISSUE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any determination made by the administering authority under subparagraph (A) shall not be subject to judicial review in any investigation conducted under subtitle B.

"(E) COLLECTION OF INFORMATION.—Upon request by the administering authority, the Commissioner of Customs shall provide the administering authority a copy of all public and proprietary information submitted to, or obtained by, the Commissioner of Customs that the administering authority considers relevant to proceedings involving merchandise from nonmarket economy countries. The administering authority shall protect proprietary information obtained under this section from public disclosure in accordance with section 777.".

(c) SUSPENSION OF NONMARKET ECONOMY COUNTRY INVESTIGATIONS.—Section 734 (19 U.S.C. 1673c) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(l) SPECIAL RULE FOR NONMARKET ECONOMY COUNTRIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The administering authority may suspend an investigation under this subtitle upon acceptance of an agreement with a nonmarket economy country to restrict the volume of imports into the United States of the merchandise under investigation only if the administering authority determines that—

"(A) such agreement satisfies the requirements of subsection (d), and

"(B) will prevent the suppression or undercutting of price levels of domestic products by imports of the merchandise under investigation.

"(2) FAILURE OF AGREEMENTS.—If the administering authority determines that an agreement accepted under this subsection no longer prevents the suppression or undercutting of domestic prices of merchandise manufactured in the United States, the provisions of subsection (i) shall apply.".

(2) The term "Agreement country" means a foreign country that has accepted the Agreement.

(3) The term "Trade Representative" means the United States Trade Representative.

(b) PETITION BY DOMESTIC INDUSTRY.—

(1) A domestic industry that produces a product that is like or directly competitive with merchandise produced by a foreign country (whether or not an Agreement country) may, if it has reason to believe that—

(A) such merchandise is being dumped in an Agreement country; and

(B) such domestic industry is being materially injured, or threatened with material injury, by reason of such dumping;

(2) A petition submitted under paragraph (1) shall contain such detailed information as the Trade Representative may require in support of the allegations in the petition.

(c) APPLICATION FOR ANTIDUMPING ACTION ON BEHALF OF THE DOMESTIC INDUSTRY.—

(1) If the Trade Representative, on the basis of the information contained in a petition submitted under paragraph (1), determines that there is a reasonable basis for the allegations in the petition, the Trade Representative shall submit to the appropriate authority of the Agreement country where the alleged dumping is occurring an application pursuant to Article 12 of the Agreement which requests that appropriate antidumping action under the law of that country be taken, on behalf of the United States, with respect to imports into that country of the merchandise concerned.

(2) At the request of the Trade Representative, the appropriate officers of the Department of Commerce and the United States International Trade Commission shall assist the Trade Representative in preparing the application under paragraph (1).

(d) CONSULTATION AFTER SUBMISSION OF APPLICATION.—After submitting an application under subsection (c)(1), the Trade Representative shall seek consultations with the appropriate authority of the Agreement country regarding the request for antidumping action.

(e) ACTION UPON REFUSAL OF AGREEMENT COUNTRY TO ACT.—If the appropriate authority of an Agreement country refuses to undertake antidumping measures in response to a request made therefor by the Trade Representative under subsection (c), the Trade Representative shall promptly consult with the domestic industry on whether action under any other law of the United States is appropriate.

(4) by striking out "paragraph (2)" in paragraph (4) (as redesignated by paragraph (2)) and inserting "paragraphs (2) and (3)".

SEC. 1320. DOWNSTREAM PRODUCT MONITORING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle D (19 U.S.C. 1677 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"SEC. 780. DOWNSTREAM PRODUCT MONITORING.

"(a) PETITION REQUESTING MONITORING.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A domestic producer of an article that is like a component part or a downstream product may petition the administering authority to designate a downstream product for monitoring under subsection (b). The petition shall specify—

"(A) the downstream product,

"(B) the component product incorporated into such downstream product, and

"(C) the reasons for suspecting that the imposition of antidumping or countervailing duties has resulted in a diversion of exports of the component part into increased production and exportation to the United States of such downstream product.

"(2) DETERMINATION REGARDING PETITION.—Within 14 days after receiving a petition submitted under paragraph (1), the administering authority shall determine—

"(A) whether there is a reasonable likelihood that imports into the United States of the downstream product will increase as an indirect result of any diversion with respect to the component part, and

"(B) whether—

"(i) the component part is already subject to monitoring to aid in the enforcement of a bilateral arrangement (within the meaning of section 804 of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984),

"(ii) merchandise related to the component part and manufactured in the same foreign country in which the component part is manufactured has been the subject of a significant number of investigations suspended under section 704 or 734 or countervailing or antidumping duty orders issued under this title or section 303, or

"(iii) merchandise manufactured or exported by the manufacturer or exporter of the component part that is similar in description and use to the component part has been the subject of at least 2 investigations suspended under section 704 or 734 or countervailing or antidumping duty orders issued under this title or section 303.

"(3) FACTORS TO TAKE INTO ACCOUNT.—In making a determination under paragraph (2)(A), the administering authority may, if appropriate, take into account such factors as—

"(A) the value of the component part in relation to the value of the downstream product,

"(B) the extent to which the component part has been substantially transformed as a result of its incorporation into the downstream product, and

"(C) the relationship between the producers of component parts and producers of downstream products.

"(4) PUBLICATION OF DETERMINATION.—The administering authority shall publish in the Federal Register notice of each determination made under paragraph (2) and, if the determination made under paragraph (2)(A) and a determination made under any subparagraph of paragraph (2)(B) are affirmative, shall transmit a copy of such determinations and the petition to the Commission.

"(5) DETERMINATIONS NOT SUBJECT TO JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any determination made by the administering authority under paragraph (2) shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(b) MONITORING BY THE COMMISSION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If the determination made under subsection (a)(2)(A) and a determination made under any clause of subsection (a)(2)(B) with respect to a petition are affirmative, the Commission shall immediately commence monitoring of trade in the downstream product that is the subject of the determination made under subsection (a)(2)(A). If the Commission finds that imports of a downstream product being monitored increased during any calendar quarter by 5 percent or more over the preceding quarter, the Commission shall analyze that increase in the context of overall economic conditions in the product sector.

"(2) REPORTS.—The Commission shall make quarterly reports to the administering authority regarding the monitoring and analyses conducted under paragraph (1). The Commission shall make the reports available to the public.

"(c) ACTION ON BASIS OF MONITORING REPORTS.—The administering authority shall review the information in the reports submitted by the Commission under subsection (b)(2) and shall—

"(1) consider the information in determining whether to initiate an investigation under section 702(a), 732(a), or 303 regarding any downstream product, and

"(2) request the Commission to cease monitoring any downstream product if the information indicates that imports into the United States are not increasing and there is no reasonable likelihood of diversion with respect to component parts.

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'component part' means any imported article that—

"(A) during the 5-year period ending on the date on which the petition is filed under subsection (a), has been subject to—

"(i) a countervailing or antidumping duty order issued under this title or section 303 that requires the deposit of estimated countervailing or antidumping duties imposed at a rate of at least 15 percent ad valorem, or

"(ii) an agreement entered into under section 704, 734, or 303 after a preliminary affirmative determination under section 703(b), 733(b)(1), or 303 was made by the administering authority which included a determination that the estimated net subsidy was at least 15 percent ad valorem or that the estimated average amount by which the foreign market value exceeded the United States price was at least 15 percent ad valorem, and

"(B) because of its inherent characteristics, is routinely used as a major part, component, assembly, subassembly, or material in a downstream product.

"(2) The term 'downstream product' means any manufactured article—

"(A) which is imported into the United States, and

"(B) into which is incorporated any component part.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for title VII of the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 779 the following:

"SEC. 781. PREVENTION OF CIRCUMVENTION OF ANTIDUMPING AND COUNTERVAILING DUTY ORDERS.

"(a) MERCHANDISE COMPLETED OR ASSEMBLED IN THE UNITED STATES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) merchandise sold in the United States is of the same class or kind as any other merchandise that is the subject of—

"(i) an antidumping duty order issued under section 736,

"(ii) a finding issued under the Antidumping Act, 1921, or

"(iii) a countervailing duty order issued under section 706 or section 303,

"(B) such merchandise sold in the United States is completed or assembled in the United States from parts or components produced in the foreign country with respect to which such order or finding applies, and

"(C) the difference between the value of such merchandise sold in the United States and the value of the imported parts and components referred to in subparagraph (B) is small,

the administering authority, after taking into account any advice provided by the Commission under subsection (e), may include within the scope of such order or finding the imported parts or components referred to in subparagraph (B) that are used in the completion or assembly of the merchandise in the United States at any time such order or finding is in effect.

"(2) FACTORS TO CONSIDER.—In determining whether to include parts or components in a countervailing or antidumping duty order or finding under paragraph (1), the administering authority shall take into account such factors as—

"(A) the pattern of trade,

"(B) whether the manufacturer or exporter of the parts or components is related to the person who assembles or completes the merchandise sold in the United States from the parts or components produced in the foreign country with respect to which the order or finding described in paragraph (1) applies, and

"(C) whether imports into the United States of the parts or components produced in such foreign country have increased after the issuance of such order or finding.

"(b) MERCHANDISE COMPLETED OR ASSEMBLED IN OTHER FOREIGN COUNTRIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) merchandise imported into the United States is of the same class or kind as any merchandise produced in a foreign country that is the subject of—

"(i) an antidumping duty order issued under section 736,

"(ii) a finding issued under the Antidumping Act, 1921, or

"(iii) a countervailing duty order issued under section 706 or section 303,

"(B) before importation into the United States, such imported merchandise is completed or assembled in another foreign country from merchandise which—

"(i) is subject to such order or finding, or

"(ii) is produced in the foreign country with respect to which such order or finding applies,

"(C) the difference between the value of such imported merchandise and the value of the merchandise described in subparagraph (B) is small, and

"(D) the administering authority determines that action is appropriate under this paragraph to prevent evasion of such order or finding,

the administering authority, after taking into account any advice provided by the Commission under subsection (e), may include such imported merchandise within the scope of such order or finding at any time such order or finding is in effect.

"(2) FACTORS TO CONSIDER.—In determining whether to include merchandise assembled or completed in a foreign country in a countervailing or antidumping duty order or finding under paragraph (1), the administering authority shall take into account such factors as—

"(A) the pattern of trade,

"(B) whether the manufacturer or exporter of the merchandise described in paragraph (1)(B) is related to the person who uses the merchandise described in paragraph (1)(B) to assemble or complete in the foreign country the merchandise that is subsequently imported into the United States, and

"(C) whether imports into the foreign country of the merchandise described in paragraph (1)(B) have increased after the issuance of such order or finding.

"(c) MINOR ALTERATIONS OF MERCHANDISE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The class or kind of merchandise subject to—

"(A) an investigation under this title,

"(B) an antidumping duty order issued under section 736,

"(C) a finding issued under the Antidumping Act, 1921, or

"(D) a countervailing duty order issued under section 706 or section 303, shall include articles altered in form or appearance in minor respects (including raw agricultural products that have undergone minor processing), whether or not included in the same tariff classification.

"(2) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to altered merchandise if the administering authority determines that it would be unnecessary to consider the altered merchandise within the scope of the investigation, order, or finding.

"(d) LATER-DEVELOPED MERCHANDISE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of determining whether merchandise developed after an investigation is initiated under this title or section 303 (hereafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'later-developed merchandise') is within the scope of an outstanding antidumping or countervailing duty order issued under this title or section 303 as a result of such investigation, the administering authority shall consider whether—

"(A) the later-developed merchandise has the same general physical characteristics as the merchandise with respect to which the order was originally issued (hereafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'earlier product'),

"(B) the expectations of the ultimate purchasers of the later-developed merchandise are the same as for the earlier product,

"(C) the ultimate use of the earlier product and the later-developed merchandise are the same,

"(D) the later-developed merchandise is sold through the same channels of trade as the earlier product, and

"(E) the later-developed merchandise is advertised and displayed in a manner similar to the earlier product.

The administering authority shall take into account any advice provided by the Commission under subsection (e) before making a determination under this subparagraph.

"(2) EXCLUSION FROM ORDERS.—The administering authority may not exclude a later-developed merchandise from a countervailing or antidumping duty order merely because the merchandise—

"(A) is classified under a tariff classification other than that identified in the petition or the administering authority's prior notices during the proceeding, or

"(B) permits the purchaser to perform additional functions, unless such additional functions constitute the primary use of the merchandise and the cost of the additional functions constitute more than a significant proportion of the total cost of production of the merchandise.

"(e) COMMISSION ADVICE.—

"(1) NOTIFICATION TO COMMISSION OF PROPOSED ACTION.—Before making a determination—

"(A) under subsection (a) with respect to merchandise completed or assembled in the United States (other than minor completion or assembly),

"(B) under subsection (b) with respect to merchandise completed or assembled in other foreign countries, or

"(C) under subsection (d) with respect to any later-developed merchandise which incorporates a significant technological advance or significant alteration of an earlier product, with respect to an antidumping or countervailing duty order or finding as to which the Commission has made an affirmative injury determination, the administering authority shall notify the Commission of the proposed inclusion of such merchandise in such countervailing or antidumping order or finding. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a decision by the administering authority regarding whether any merchandise is within a category for which notice is required under this paragraph is not subject to judicial review.

"(2) REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION.—After receiving notice under paragraph (1), the Commission may request consultations with the administering authority regarding the inclusion. Upon the request of the Commission, the administering authority shall consult with the Commission and any such consultation shall be completed within 15 days after the date of the request.

"(3) COMMISSION ADVICE.—If the Commission believes, after consultation under paragraph (2), that a significant injury issue is presented by the proposed inclusion, the Commission may provide written advice to the administering authority as to whether the inclusion would be inconsistent with the affirmative determination of the Commission on which the order or finding is based. If the Commission decides to provide such written advice, it shall promptly notify the administering authority of its intention to do so, and must provide such advice within 60 days after the date of notification under paragraph (1). For purposes of formulating its advice with respect to merchandise completed or assembled in the United States from parts or components produced in a foreign country, the Commission shall consider whether the inclusion of such parts or components taken as a whole would be inconsistent with its prior affirmative determination.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for title VII of the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 780 the following:

"Sec. 781. Prevention of Circumvention of Antidumping and Countervailing Duty Orders.".

"(d)(1) Any steel product that is manufactured in a country that is not party to a bilateral arrangement from steel which was melted and poured in a country that is party to a bilateral arrangement (hereafter in this subsection referred to as an 'arrangement country') may be treated for purposes of the quantitative restrictions and related terms under that arrangement as if it were a product of the arrangement country.

"(2) The President may implement such procedures as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purpose of paragraph (1).

"(3) The United States Trade Representative may, in a manner consistent with the purpose of any so-called 'third country equity provision' of an arrangement entered into under the President's Steel Policy, take such actions as he deems necessary with respect to steel imports of any other country or countries so as to ensure the effectiveness of any portion of such arrangement.".

SEC. 1323. SHORT LIFE CYCLE PRODUCTS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PRODUCT CATEGORIES FOR SHORT LIFE CYCLE MERCHANDISE.—Subtitle B is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 739. ESTABLISHMENT OF PRODUCT CATEGORIES FOR SHORT LIFE CYCLE MERCHANDISE.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PRODUCT CATEGORIES.—

"(1) PETITIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—An eligible domestic entity may file a petition with the Commission requesting that a product category be established with respect to short life cycle merchandise at any time after the merchandise becomes the subject of 2 or more affirmative dumping determinations.

"(B) CONTENTS.—A petition filed under subparagraph (A) shall—

"(i) identify the short life cycle merchandise that is the subject of the affirmative dumping determinations,

"(ii) specify the short life cycle merchandise that the petitioner seeks to have included in the same product category as the merchandise that is subject to the affirmative dumping determinations,

"(iii) specify any short life cycle merchandise the petitioner particularly seeks to have excluded from the product category,

"(iv) provide reasons for the inclusions and exclusions specified under clauses (ii) and (iii), and

"(v) identify such merchandise in terms of the designations used in the Tariff Schedules of the United States.

"(2) DETERMINATIONS ON SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION.—Upon receiving a petition under paragraph (1), the Commission shall—

"(A) request the administering authority to confirm promptly the affirmative determinations on which the petition is based, and

"(B) upon receipt of such confirmation, determine whether the merchandise covered by the confirmed affirmative determinations is short life cycle merchandise and whether the petitioner is an eligible domestic entity.

"(3) NOTICE; HEARINGS.—If the determinations under paragraph (2)(B) are affirmative, the Commission shall—

"(A) publish notice in the Federal Register that the petition has been received, and

"(B) provide opportunity for the presentation of views regarding the establishment of the requested product category, including a public hearing if requested by any interested person.

"(4) DETERMINATIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—By no later than the date that is 90 days after the date on which a petition is filed under paragraph (1), the Commission shall determine the scope of the product category into which the short life cycle merchandise that is the subject of the affirmative dumping determinations identified in such petition shall be classified for purposes of this section.

"(B) MODIFICATIONS NOT REQUESTED BY PETITION.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The Commission may, on its own initiative, make a determination modifying the scope of any product category established under subparagraph (A) at any time.

"(ii) NOTICE AND HEARING.—Determinations may be made under clause (i) only after the Commission has—

"(I) published in the Federal Register notice of the proposed modification, and

"(II) provided interested parties an opportunity for a hearing, and a period for the submission of written comments, on the classification of merchandise into the product categories to be affected by such determination

"(C) BASIS OF DETERMINATIONS.—In making determinations under subparagraph (A) or (B), the Commission shall ensure that each product category consists of similar short life cycle merchandise which is produced by similar processes under similar circumstances and has similar uses.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) ELIGIBLE DOMESTIC ENTITY.—The term 'eligible domestic entity' means a manufacturer or producer in the United States, or a certified union or recognized union or group of workers which is representative of an industry in the United States, that manufactures or produces short life cycle merchandise that is—

"(A) like or directly competitive with other merchandise that is the subject of 2 or more affirmative dumping determinations, or

"(B) is similar enough to such other merchandise as to be considered for inclusion with such merchandise in a product monitoring category established under this section.

"(2) AFFIRMATIVE DUMPING DETERMINATION.—The term 'affirmative dumping determination' means—

"(A) any affirmative final determination made by the administering authority under section 735(a) during the 8-year period preceding the filing of the petition under this section that results in the issuance of an antidumping duty order under section 736 which requires the deposit of estimated antidumping duties at a rate of not less than 15 percent ad valorem, or

"(B) any affirmative preliminary determination that—

"(i) is made by the administering authority under section 733(b) during the 8-year period preceding the filing of the petition under this section in the course of an investigation for which no final determination is made under section 735 by reason of a suspension of the investigation under section 734, and

"(ii) includes a determination that the estimated average amount by which the foreign market value of the merchandise exceeds the United States price of the merchandise is not less than 15 percent ad valorem.

"(3) SUBJECT OF AFFIRMATIVE DUMPING DETERMINATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Short life cycle merchandise of a manufacturer shall be treated as being the subject of an affirmative dumping determination only if the administering authority—

"(i) makes a separate determination of the amount by which the foreign market value of such merchandise of the manufacturer exceeds the United States price of such merchandise of the manufacturer, and

"(ii) specifically identifies the manufacturer by name with such amount in the affirmative dumping determination or in an antidumping duty order issued as a result of the affirmative dumping determination.

"(B) EXCLUSION.—Short life cycle merchandise of a manufacturer shall not be treated as being the subject of an affirmative dumping determination if—

"(i) such merchandise of the manufacturer is part of a group of merchandise to which the administering authority assigns (in lieu of making separate determinations described in subparagraph (A)(i)(I)) an amount determined to be the amount by which the foreign market value of the merchandise in such group exceeds the United States price of the merchandise in such group, and

"(ii) the merchandise and the manufacturer are not specified by name in the affirmative dumping determination or in any antidumping duty order issued as a result of such affirmative dumping determination.

"(4) SHORT LIFE CYCLE MERCHANDISE.—The term 'short life cycle merchandise' means any product that the Commission determines is likely to become outmoded within 4 years, by reason of technological advances, after the product is commercially available. For purposes of this paragraph, the term

'outmoded' refers to a kind or style that is no longer state-of-the-art.

"(c) TRANSITIONAL RULES.—

"(1) For purposes of this section and section 733 (b)(1)(B) and (C), all affirmative dumping determinations described in subsection (b)(2)(A) that were made after December 31, 1980, and before the date of enactment of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988, and all affirmative dumping determinations described in subsection (b)(2)(B) that were made after December 31, 1984, and before the date of enactment of such Act, with respect to each category of short life cycle merchandise of the same manufacturer shall be treated as one affirmative dumping determination with respect to that category for that manufacturer which was made on the date on which the latest of such determinations was made.

"(2) No affirmative dumping determination that—

"(A) is described in subsection (b)(2)(A) and was made before January 1, 1981, or

"(B) is described in subsection (b)(2)(B) and was made before January 1, 1985,

If the determination of the administering authority under this subsection is affirmative, the determination shall include the estimated average amount by which the foreign market value exceeds the United States price.

"(B) IF CERTAIN SHORT LIFE CYCLE MERCHANDISE INVOLVED.—If a petition filed under section 732(b), or an investigation commenced under section 732(a), concerns short life cycle merchandise that is included in a product category established under section 739(a), subparagraph (A) shall be applied—

"(i) by substituting "120 days" for "160 days" if manufacturers that are second offenders account for a significant proportion of the merchandise under investigation, and

"(ii) by substituting "100 days" for "160 days" if manufacturers that are multiple offenders account for a significant proportion of the merchandise under investigation.

"(C) DEFINITIONS OF OFFENDERS.—For purposes of subparagraph (B)—

"(i) The term 'second offender' means a manufacturer that is specified in 2 affirmative dumping determinations (within the meaning of section 739) as the manufacturer of short life cycle merchandise that is—

"(I) specified in both such determinations, and

"(II) within the scope of the product category referred to in subparagraph (B).

"(ii) The term 'multiple offender' means a manufacturer that is specified in 3 or more affirmative dumping determinations (within the meaning of section 739) as the manufacturer of short life cycle merchandise that is—

(2) Paragraph (1) of subsection (c) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following sentence: "No extension of a determination date may be made under this paragraph for any investigation in which a determination date provided for in subsection (b)(1)(B) applies unless the petitioner submits written notice to the administering authority of its consent to the extension.".

Upon receiving such request, the Commissioner of Customs shall collect information regarding the volume and value of entries of the class or kind of merchandise that is the subject of the investigation and shall transmit such information to the administering authority at such times as the administering authority shall direct (at least once every 30 days), until a final determination is made under section 705(a), the investigation is terminated, or the administering authority withdraws the request.".

"(ii) PREVENTION OF RECURRENCE.—For purposes of making its finding under clause (i), the Commission shall make an evaluation as to whether the effectiveness of the countervailing duty order would be materially impaired if such imposition did not occur.

"(iii) EVALUATION OF EFFECTIVENESS.—In making the evaluation under clause (ii), the Commission shall consider, among other factors it considers relevant—

"(I) the condition of the domestic industry,

"(II) whether massive imports of the merchandise over a relatively short period of time can be accounted for by efforts to avoid the potential imposition of countervailing duties,

Upon receiving such request, the Commissioner of Customs shall collect information regarding the volume and value of entries of the class or kind of merchandise that is the subject of the investigation and shall transmit such information to the administering authority at such times as the administering authority shall direct (at least once every 30 days), until a final determination is made under section 735(a), the investigation is terminated, or the administering authority withdraws the request.".

"(A) RETROACTIVE APPLICATION.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—If the finding of the administering authority under subsection (a)(3) is affirmative, then the final determination of the Commission shall include a finding as to whether retroactive imposition of antidumping duties on the merchandise appears necessary to prevent recurrence of material injury that was caused by massive imports of the merchandise over a relatively short period of time.

PART 4—TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE

SEC. 1371. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the "Telecommunications Trade Act of 1988".

SEC. 1372. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) rapid growth in the world market for telecommunications products and services is likely to continue for several decades;

(2) the United States can improve prospects for—

(A) the growth of—

(i) United States exports of telecommunications products and services, and

(ii) export-related employment and consumer services in the United States, and

(B) the continuance of the technological leadership of the United States, by undertaking a program to achieve an open world market for trade in telecommunications products, services, and investment;

(3) most foreign markets for telecommunications products, services, and investment are characterized by extensive government intervention (including restrictive import practices and discriminatory procurement practices) which adversely affect United States exports of telecommunications products and services and United States investment in telecommunications;

(4) the open nature of the United States telecommunications market, accruing from the liberalization and restructuring of such market, has contributed, and will continue to contribute, to an increase in imports of telecommunications products and a growing imbalance in competitive opportunities for trade in telecommunications;

(5) unless this imbalance is corrected through the achievement of mutually advantageous market opportunities for trade in telecommunications products and services between the United States and foreign countries, the United States should avoid granting continued open access to the telecommunications products and services of such foreign countries in the United States market; and

(6) the unique business conditions in the worldwide market for telecommunications products and services caused by the combination of deregulation and divestiture in the United States, which represents a unilateral liberalization of United States trade with the rest of the world, and continuing government intervention in the domestic industries of many other countries create a need to make an exception in the case of telecommunications products and services that should not necessarily be a precedent for legislating specific sectoral priorities in combating the closed markets or unfair foreign trade practices of other countries.

(b) Purposes.—The purposes of this part are—

(1) to foster the economic and technological growth of, and employment in, the United States telecommunications industry;

(2) to secure a high quality telecommunications network for the benefit of the people of the United States;

(3) to develop an international consensus in favor of open trade and competition in telecommunications products and services;

(4) to ensure that countries which have made commitments to open telecommunications trade fully abide by those commitments; and

(5) to achieve a more open world trading system for telecommunications products and services through negotiation and provision of mutually advantageous market opportunities for United States telecommunications exporters and their subsidiaries in those markets in which barriers exist to free international trade.

SEC. 1374. INVESTIGATION OF FOREIGN TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE BARRIERS.

(a) In General.—The Trade Representative shall conduct an investigation to identify priority foreign countries. Such investigation shall be concluded by no later than the date that is 5 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Factors To Be Taken Into Account.—In identifying priority foreign countries under subsection (a), the Trade Representative shall take into account, among other relevant factors—

(1) the nature and significance of the acts, policies, and practices that deny mutually advantageous market opportunities to telecommunications products and services of United States firms;

(2) the economic benefits (actual and potential) accruing to foreign firms from open access to the United States market;

(3) the potential size of the market of a foreign country for telecommunications products and services of United States firms;

(4) the potential to increase United States exports of telecommunications products and services, either directly or through the establishment of a beneficial precedent; and

(5) measurable progress being made to eliminate the objectionable acts, policies, or practices.

(c) Revocations and Additional Identifications.—

(1) The Trade Representative may at any time, after taking into account the factors described in subsection (b)—

(A) revoke the identification of any priority foreign country that was made under this section, or

(B) identify any foreign country as a priority foreign country under this section,

if information available to the Trade Representative indicates that such action is appropriate.

(2) The Trade Representative shall include in the semiannual report submitted to the Congress under section 309(3) of the Trade Act of 1974 a detailed explanation of the reasons for the revocation under paragraph (1) of this subsection of any identification of any foreign country as a priority foreign country.

(d) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—By no later than the date that is 30 days after the date on which the investigation conducted under subsection (a) is completed, the United States Trade Representative shall submit a report on the investigation to the President and to appropriate committees of the Congress.

SEC. 1375. NEGOTIATIONS IN RESPONSE TO INVESTIGATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Upon—

(1) the date that is 30 days after the date on which any foreign country is identified in the investigation conducted under section 1374(a) as a priority foreign country, and

(2) the date on which any foreign country is identified under section 1374(c)(1)(B) as a priority foreign country, the President shall enter into negotiations with such priority foreign country for the purpose of entering into a bilateral or multilateral trade agreement under part 1 of subtitle A which meets the specific negotiating objectives established by the President under subsection (b) for such priority foreign country.

(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIFIC NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES FOR EACH FOREIGN PRIORITY COUNTRY.—

(1) The President shall establish such relevant specific negotiating objectives on a country-by-country basis as are necessary to meet the general negotiating objectives of the United States under this section.

(2)(A) The President may refine or modify specific negotiating objectives for particular negotiations in order to respond to circumstances arising during the negotiating period, including—

(i) changed practices by the priority foreign country,

(ii) tangible substantive developments in multilateral negotiations,

(iii) changes in competitive positions, technological developments, or

(iv) other relevant factors.

(B) By no later than the date that is 30 days after the date on which the President makes any modifications or refinements to specific negotiating objectives under subparagraph (A), the President shall submit to appropriate committees of the Congress a statement describing such modifications or refinements and the reasons for such modifications or refinements.

(c) GENERAL NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.—The general negotiating objectives of the United States under this section are—

(1) to obtain multilateral or bilateral agreements (or the modification of existing agreements) that provide mutually advantageous market opportunities for trade in telecommunications products and services between the United States and foreign countries;

(2) to correct the imbalances in market opportunities accruing from reductions in barriers to the access of telecommunications products and services of foreign firms to the United States market; and

(3) to facilitate the increase in United States exports of telecommunications products and services to a level of exports that reflects the competitiveness of the United States telecommunications industry.

(d) SPECIFIC NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.—The specific negotiating objectives of the United States under this section regarding telecommunications products and services are to obtain—

(1) national treatment for telecommunications products and services that are provided by United States firms;

(2) most-favored-nation treatment for such products and services;

(3) nondiscriminatory procurement policies with respect to such products and services and the inclusion under the Agreement on Government Procurement of the procurement (by sale or lease by government-owned or controlled entities) of all telecommunications products and services;

(4) the reduction or elimination of customs duties on telecommunications products;

(5) the elimination of subsidies, violations of intellectual property rights, and other unfair trade practices that distort international trade in telecommunications products and services;

(6) the elimination of investment barriers that restrict the establishment of foreign-owned business entities which market such products and services;

(7) assurances that any requirement for the registration of telecommunications products, which are to be located on customer premises, for the purposes of—

(A) attachment to a telecommunications network in a foreign country, and

(B) the marketing of the products in a foreign country, be limited to the certification by the manufacturer that the products meet the standards established by the foreign country for preventing harm to the network or network personnel;

(8) transparency of, and open participation in, the standards-setting processes used in foreign countries with respect to telecommunications products;

(9) the ability to have telecommunications products, which are to be located on customer premises, approved and registered by type, and, if appropriate, the establishment of procedures between the United States and foreign countries for the mutual recognition of type approvals;

(10) access to the basic telecommunications network in foreign countries on reasonable and nondiscriminatory terms and conditions (including nondiscriminatory prices) for the provision of value-added services by United States suppliers;

(11) the nondiscriminatory procurement of telecommunications products and services by foreign entities that provide local exchange telecommunications services which are owned, controlled, or, if appropriate, regulated by foreign governments; and

(12) monitoring and effective dispute settlement mechanisms to facilitate compliance with matters referred to in the preceding paragraphs of this subsection.

SEC. 1376. ACTIONS TO BE TAKEN IF NO AGREEMENT OBTAINED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) If the President is unable, before the close of the negotiating period, to enter into an agreement under subtitle A with any priority foreign country identified under section 1374 which achieves the general negotiating objectives described in section 1375(b) as defined by the specific objectives established by the President for that country, the President shall take whatever actions authorized under subsection (b) that are appropriate and most likely to achieve such general negotiating objectives.

(2) In taking actions under paragraph (1), the President shall first take those actions which most directly affect trade in telecommunications products and services with the priority foreign country referred to in paragraph (1), unless the President determines that actions against other economic sectors would be more effective in achieving the general negotiating objectives referred to in paragraph (1).

(b) ACTIONS AUTHORIZED.—

(1) The President is authorized to take any of the following actions under subsection (a) with respect to any priority foreign country:

(A) termination, withdrawal, or suspension of any portion of any trade agreement entered into with such country under—

(i) the Trade Act of 1974,

(ii) section 201 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, or

(iii) section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, with respect to any duty or import restriction imposed by the United States on any telecommunications product;

(B) actions described in section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974;

(C) prohibition of purchases by the Federal Government of telecommunications products of such country;

(D) increases in domestic preferences under title III of the Act of March 3, 1933 (41 U.S.C. 10a, et seq.) for purchases by the Federal Government of telecommunications products of such country;

(E) suspension of any waiver of domestic preferences under title III of the Act of March 3, 1933 (41 U.S.C. 10a, et seq.) which may have been extended to such country pursuant to the Trade Agreements Act of 1979 with respect to telecommunications products or any other products;

(F) issuance of orders to appropriate officers and employees of the Federal Government to deny Federal funds or Federal credits for purchases of the telecommunications products of such country; and

(G) suspension, in whole or in part, of benefits accorded articles of such country under title V of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2461, et seq.).

(2) Notwithstanding section 125 of the Trade Act of 1974 and any other provision of law, if any portion of a trade agreement described in paragraph (1)(A) is terminated, withdrawn, or suspended under paragraph (1) with respect to any duty imposed by the United States on the products of a foreign country, the rate of such duty that shall apply to such products entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, after the date on which such termination, withdrawal, or suspension takes effect shall be a rate determined by the President.

(c) NEGOTIATING PERIOD.—

(1) For purposes of this section, the term "negotiating period" means—

(A) with respect to a priority foreign country identified in the investigation conducted under section 1374(a), the 18-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, and

(B) with respect to any foreign country identified as a priority foreign country after the conclusion of such investigation, the 1-year period beginning on the date on which such identification is made.

(2)(A) The negotiating period with respect to a priority foreign country may be extended for not more than two 1-year periods.

(B) By no later than the date that is 15 days after the date on which the President extends the negotiating period with respect to any priority foreign country, the President shall submit to appropriate committees of the Congress a report on the status of negotiations with such country that includes—

(i) a finding by the President that substantial progress is being made in negotiations with such country, and

(ii) a statement detailing the reasons why an extension of such negotiating period is necessary.

(d) MODIFICATION AND TERMINATION AUTHORITY.—The President may modify or terminate any action taken under subsection (a) if, after taking into consideration the factors described in section 1374(b), the President determines that changed circumstances warrant such modification or termination.

(e) REPORT.—The President shall promptly inform the appropriate committees of the Congress of any action taken under subsection (a) or of the modification or termination of any such action under subsection (d).

SEC. 1377. REVIEW OF TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION BY TRADE REPRESENTATIVE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) In conducting the annual analysis under section 181(a) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2241), the Trade Representative shall review the operation and effectiveness of—

(A) each trade agreement negotiated by reason of this part that is in force with respect to the United States; and

(B) every other trade agreement regarding telecommunications products or services that is in force with respect to the United States.

(2) In each review conducted under paragraph (1), the Trade Representative shall determine whether any act, policy, or practice of the foreign country that has entered into the agreement described in paragraph (1)—

(A) is not in compliance with the terms of such agreement, or

(B) otherwise denies, within the context of the terms of such agreement, to telecommunications products and services of United States firms mutually advantageous market opportunities in that foreign country.

(b) Review Factors.—

(1) In conducting reviews under subsection (a), the Trade Representative shall consider any evidence of actual patterns of trade (including United States exports to a foreign country of telecommunications products and services, including sales and services related to those products) that do not reflect patterns of trade which would reasonably be anticipated to flow from the concessions or commitments of such country based on the international competitive position and export potential of such products and services.

(2) The Trade Representative shall consult with the United States International Trade Commission with regard to the actual patterns of trade described in paragraph (1).

(c) ACTION IN RESPONSE TO AFFIRMATIVE DETERMINATION.—

(1) Any affirmative determination made by the Trade Representative under subsection (a)(2) with respect to any act, policy, or practice of a foreign country shall, for purposes of chapter 1 of title III of the Trade Act of 1974, be treated as an affirmative determination under section 304(a)(1)(A) of such Act that such act, policy, or practice violates a trade agreement.

(2) In taking actions under section 301 by reason of paragraph (1), the Trade Representative shall first take those actions which most directly affect trade in telecommunications products and services with the priority foreign country referred to in paragraph (1), unless the Trade Representative determines that actions against other economic sectors would be more effective in achieving compliance by the foreign country with the trade agreement that is the subject of the affirmative determination made under subsection (a)(2).

SEC. 1378. COMPENSATION AUTHORITY.

If—

(1) the President has taken action under section 1376(a) with respect to any foreign country, and

(2) such action is found to be inconsistent with the international obligations of the United States, including the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the President may enter into trade agreements with such foreign country for the purpose of granting new concessions as compensation for such action in order to maintain the general level of reciprocal and mutually advantageous concessions.

SEC. 1379. CONSULTATIONS.

(a) ADVICE FROM DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES.—Prior to taking any action under this part, the President shall seek information and advice from the interagency trade organization established under section 242(a) of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 (19 U.S.C. 1872).

(b) ADVICE FROM THE PRIVATE SECTOR.—Before—

(1) the Trade Representative concludes the investigation conducted under section 1374(a) or takes action under section 1374(c),

(2) the President establishes specific negotiating objectives under section 1375(b) with respect to any foreign country, or

(3) the President takes action under section 1376, the Trade Representative shall provide an opportunity for the presentation of views by any interested party with respect to such investigation, objectives, or action, including appropriate committees established pursuant to section 135 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2155).

(c) CONSULTATIONS WITH CONGRESS AND OFFICIAL ADVISORS.—For purposes of conducting negotiations under section 1375(a), the Trade Representative shall keep appropriate committees of the Congress, as well as appropriate committees established pursuant to section 135 of the Trade Act of 1974, currently informed with respect to—

(1) the negotiating priorities and objectives for each priority foreign country;

(2) the assessment of negotiating prospects, both bilateral and multilateral; and

(3) any United States concessions which might be included in negotiations to achieve the objectives described in subsections (c) and (d) of section 1375.

(d) MODIFICATION OF SPECIFIC NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.—Before the President takes any action under section 1375(b)(2)(A) to refine or modify specific negotiating objectives, the President shall consult with the Congress and with members of the industry, and representatives of labor, affected by the proposed refinement or modification.

SEC. 1380. SUBMISSION OF DATA; ACTION TO ENSURE COMPLIANCE.

(a) SUBMISSION OF DATA.—The Federal Communications Commission (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Commission") shall periodically submit to appropriate committees of the House of Representatives and of the Senate any data collected and otherwise made public under Report No. DC-1105, "Information Reporting Requirements Established for Common Carriers", adopted February 25, 1988, relating to FCC Docket No. 86-494, adopted December 23, 1987.

(b) ACTION TO ENSURE COMPLIANCE.—

(1)(A) Any product of a foreign country that is subject to registration or approval by the Commission may be entered only if—

(i) such product conforms with all applicable rules and regulations of the Commission, and

(ii) the information which is required on Federal Communications Commission Form 740 on the date of enactment of this Act is provided to the appropriate customs officer at the time of such entry in such form and manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

(B) For purposes of this paragraph, the term "entered" means entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, in the customs territory of the United States.

(2) The Commission, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Trade Representative shall provide such assistance in the enforcement of paragraph (1) as the Secretary of the Treasury may request.

(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall compile the information collected under paragraph (1)(A)(ii) into a summary and shall annually submit such summary to the Congress until the authority to negotiate trade agreements under part 1 of subtitle A expires. Such information shall also be made available to the public.

SEC. 1381. STUDY ON TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMPETITIVENESS IN THE UNITED STATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Commerce, in consultation with the Federal Communications Commission and the United States Trade Representative, shall conduct a study of the competitiveness of the United States telecommunications industry and the effects of foreign telecommunications policies and practices on such industry in order to assist the Congress and the President in determining what actions might be necessary to preserve the competitiveness of the United States telecommunications industry.

(b) PUBLIC COMMENT.—The Secretary of Commerce may, as appropriate, provide notice and reasonable opportunity for public comment as part of the study conducted under subsection (a).

(c) REPORT.—The Secretary of Commerce shall, by no later than the date that is 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, submit to the Congress and the President a report on the findings and recommendations reached by the Secretary of Commerce as a result of the study conducted under subsection (a). Such report shall be referred to the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives and of the Senate.

SEC. 1382. INTERNATIONAL OBLIGATIONS.

Nothing in this part may be construed to require actions inconsistent with the international obligations of the United States, including the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Subtitle D—Adjustment to Import Competition

PART 1—POSITIVE ADJUSTMENT BY INDUSTRIES INJURED BY IMPORTS

SEC. 1401. POSITIVE ADJUSTMENT BY INDUSTRIES INJURED BY IMPORTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 1 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2251-2253) is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 1—POSITIVE ADJUSTMENT BY INDUSTRIES INJURED BY IMPORTS

"SEC. 201. ACTION TO FACILITATE POSITIVE ADJUSTMENT TO IMPORT COMPETITION.

"(a) Presidential Action.—If the United States International Trade Commission (hereinafter referred to in this chapter as the 'Commission') determines under section 202(b) that an article is being imported into the United States in such increased quantities as to be a substantial cause of serious injury, or the threat thereof, to the domestic industry producing an article like or directly competitive with the imported article, the President, in accordance with this chapter, shall take all appropriate and feasible action within his power which the President determines will facilitate efforts by the domestic industry to make a positive adjustment to import competition and provide greater economic and social benefits than costs.

"(b) Positive Adjustment to Import Competition.—

"(1) For purposes of this chapter, a positive adjustment to import competition occurs when—

"(A) the domestic industry—

"(i) is able to compete successfully with imports after actions taken under section 204 terminate, or

"(ii) the domestic industry experiences an orderly transfer of resources to other productive pursuits; and

"(B) dislocated workers in the industry experience an orderly transition to productive pursuits.

"(2) The domestic industry may be considered to have made a positive adjustment to import competition even though the industry is not of the same size and composition as the industry at the time the petition was filed under subsection (a).

"SEC. 202. INVESTIGATIONS, DETERMINATIONS, AND RECOMMENDATIONS BY COMMISSION.

"(a) Petitions and Adjustment Plans.—

"(1) A petition requesting action under this chapter for the purpose of facilitating positive adjustment to import competition may be filed with the Commission by an entity, including a trade association, firm, certified or recognized union, or group of workers, which is representative of an industry.

"(2) A petition under paragraph (1)—

"(A) shall include a statement describing the specific purposes for which action is being sought, which may include facilitating the orderly transfer of resources to more productive pursuits, enhancing competitiveness, or other means of adjustment to new conditions of competition; and

"(B) may—

"(i) subject to subsection (d)(1)(C)(i), request provisional relief under subsection (d)(1); or

"(ii) request, or at any time before the 150th day after the date of filing be amended to request, provisional relief under subsection (d)(2).

"(3) Whenever a petition is filed under paragraph (1), the Commission shall promptly transmit copies of the petition to the Office of the United States Trade Representative and other Federal agencies directly concerned.

"(4) A petitioner under paragraph (1) may submit to the Commission and the United States Trade Representative (hereafter in this chapter referred to as the 'Trade Representative'), either with the petition, or at any time within 120 days after the date of filing of the petition, a plan to facilitate positive adjustment to import competition.

"(5)(A) Before submitting an adjustment plan under paragraph (4), the petitioner and other entities referred to in paragraph (1) that wish to participate may consult with the Trade Representative, the officers and employees of any Federal agency that is considered appropriate by the Trade Representative, for purposes of evaluating the adequacy of the proposals being considered for inclusion in the plan in relation to specific actions that may be taken under this chapter.

"(B) A request for any consultation under subparagraph (A) must be made to the Trade Representative. Upon receiving such a request, the Trade Representative shall confer with the petitioner and provide such assistance, including publication of appropriate notice in the Federal Register, as may be practicable in obtaining other participants in the consultation. No consultation may occur under subparagraph (A) unless the Trade Representative, or his delegate, is in attendance.

"(6)(A) In the course of any investigation under subsection (b), the Commission shall seek information (on a confidential basis, to the extent appropriate) on actions being taken, or planned to be taken, or both, by firms and workers in the industry to make a positive adjustment to import competition.

"(B) Regardless whether an adjustment plan is submitted under paragraph (4) by the petitioner, if the Commission makes an affirmative determination under subsection (b), any—

"(i) firm in the domestic industry;

"(ii) certified or recognized union or group of workers in the domestic industry;

"(iii) local community;

"(iv) trade association representing the domestic industry; or

"(v) any other person or group of persons, may, individually, submit to the Commission commitments regarding actions such persons and entities intend to take to facilitate positive adjustment to import competition.

"(7) Nothing in paragraphs (5) and (6) may be construed to provide immunity under the antitrust laws.

"(b) Investigations and Determinations by Commission.—

"(1)(A) Upon the filing of a petition under subsection (b), the request of the President or the Trade Representative, the resolution of either the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives or the Committee on Finance of the Senate, or on its own motion, the Commission shall promptly make an investigation to determine whether an article is being imported into the United States in such increased quantities as to be a substantial cause of serious injury, or the threat thereof, to the domestic industry producing an article like or directly competitive with the imported article.

"(B) For purposes of this section, the term 'substantial cause' means a cause which is important and not less than any other cause.

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Commission shall make the determination under paragraph (1) within 120 days after the date on which the petition is filed, the request or resolution is received, or the motion is adopted, as the case may be.

"(B) If before the 100th day after a petition is filed under subsection (a)(1) the Commission determines that the investigation is extraordinarily complicated, the Commission shall make the determination under paragraph (1) within 150 days after the date referred to in subparagraph (A).

"(3)(A) If the Commission makes an affirmative determination under paragraph (1) and the petitioner alleges the existence of critical circumstances, the Commission shall make a determination regarding such allegation—

"(i) on or before the 120th day after the day on which the petition was filed, if such allegation was included in the petition on or before the 90th day after such filing date; or

"(ii) on or before the date the report required under subsection (f) regarding the determination is submitted to the President, if such allegation was included in the petition after the 90th day, and on or before the 150th day, after such filing date.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph and subsection (d)(2), critical circumstances exist if a substantial increase in imports (either actual or relative to domestic production) over a relatively short period of time has led to circumstances in which a delay in taking action under this chapter would cause harm that would significantly impair the effectiveness of such action.

"(4) In the course of any proceeding under this subsection, the Commission shall, after reasonable notice, hold public hearings and shall afford interested parties and consumers an opportunity to be present, to present evidence, to comment on the adjustment plan, if any, submitted under subsection (a), and to be heard at such hearings.

"(c) Factors Applied in Making Determinations.—

"(1) In making determinations under subsection (b), the Commission shall take into account all economic factors which it considers relevant, including (but not limited to)—

"(A) with respect to serious injury—

"(i) the significant idling of productive facilities in the domestic industry,

"(ii) the inability of a significant number of firms to carry out domestic production operations at a reasonable level of profit, and

"(iii) significant unemployment or underemployment within the domestic industry;

"(B) with respect to threat of serious injury—

"(i) a decline in sales or market share, a higher and growing inventory (whether maintained by domestic producers, importers, wholesalers, or retailers), and a downward trend in production, profits, wages, or employment (or increasing underemployment) in the domestic industry,

"(ii) the extent to which firms in the domestic industry are unable to generate adequate capital to finance the modernization of their domestic plants and equipment, or are unable to maintain existing levels of expenditures for research and development,

"(iii) the extent to which the United States market is the focal point for the diversion of exports of the article concerned by reason of restraints on exports of such article to, or on imports of such article into, third country markets; and

"(C) with respect to substantial cause, an increase in imports (either actual or relative to domestic production) and a decline in the proportion of the domestic market supplied by domestic producers.

"(2) In making determinations under subsection (b), the Commission shall—

"(A) consider the condition of the domestic industry over the course of the relevant business cycle, but may not aggregate the causes of declining demand associated with a recession or economic downturn in the United States economy into a single cause of serious injury or threat of injury; and

"(B) examine factors other than imports which may be a cause of serious injury, or threat of serious injury, to the domestic industry.

The Commission shall include the results of its examination under subparagraph (B) in the report submitted by the Commission to the President under subsection (e).

"(3) The presence or absence of any factor which the Commission is required to evaluate in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) is not necessarily dispositive of whether an article is being imported into the United States in such increased quantities as to be a substantial cause of serious injury, or the threat thereof, to the domestic industry.

"(4) For purposes of subsection (b), in determining the domestic industry producing an article like or directly competitive with an imported article, the Commission—

"(A) to the extent information is available, shall, in the case of a domestic producer which also imports, treat as part of such domestic industry only its domestic production;

"(B) may, in the case of a domestic producer which produces more than one article, treat as part of such domestic industry only that portion or subdivision of the producer which produces the like or directly competitive article; and

"(C) may, in the case of one or more domestic producers which produce a like or directly competitive article in a major geographic area of the United States and whose production facilities in such area for such article constitute a substantial portion of the domestic industry in the United States and primarily serve the market in such area, and where the imports are concentrated in such area, treat as such domestic industry only that segment of the production located in such area.

"(5) In the course of any proceeding under this subsection, the Commission shall investigate any factor which in its judgment may be contributing to increased imports of the article under investigation. Whenever in the course of its investigation the Commission has reason to believe that the increased imports are attributable in part to circumstances which come within the purview of subtitles A and B of title VII or section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930, or other remedial provisions of law, the Commission shall promptly notify the appropriate agency so that such action may be taken as is otherwise authorized by such provisions of law.

"(6) For purposes of this subsection:

"(A) The term 'domestic industry' includes producers located in the United States insular possession.

"(B) The term 'significant idling of productive facilities' includes the closing of plants or the underutilization of production capacity.

"(d) PROVISIONAL RELIEF.—

"(1)(A) An entity representing a domestic industry that produces a perishable agricultural product that is like or directly competitive with an imported perishable agricultural product may file a request with the Trade Representative for the monitoring of imports of that product under subparagraph (B). Within 21 days after receiving the request, the Trade Representative shall determine if—

"(i) the imported product is a perishable agricultural product; and

"(ii) there is a reasonable indication that such product is being imported into the United States in such increased quantities as to be, or likely to be, a substantial cause of serious injury, or the threat thereof, to such domestic industry.

"(B) If the determinations under subparagraph (A)(i) and (ii) are affirmative, the Trade Representative shall request, under section 332(g) of the Tariff Act of 1930, the Commission to monitor and investigate the imports concerned for a period not to exceed 2 years. The monitoring and investigation may include the collection and analysis of information that would expedite an investigation under subsection (b).

"(C) If a petition filed under subsection (a)—

"(i) alleges injury from imports of a perishable agricultural product that has been, on the date the allegation is included in the petition, subject to monitoring by the Commission under paragraph (2) for not less than 90 days; and

"(ii) requests that provisional relief be provided under this subsection with respect to such imports;

the Commission shall, not later than the 21st day after the day on which the request was filed, make a determination, on the basis of available information, whether increased imports (either actual or relative to domestic production) of the perishable agricultural product are a substantial cause of serious injury, or the threat thereof, to the domestic industry producing a like or directly competitive perishable product, and whether either—

"(I) the serious injury is likely to be difficult to repair by reason of perishability of the like or directly competitive agricultural product; or

"(II) the serious injury cannot be timely prevented through investigation under subsection (b) and action under section 203.

"(D) At the request of the Commission, the Secretary of Agriculture shall promptly provide to the Commission any relevant information that the Department of Agriculture may have for purposes of making determinations and findings under this subsection.

"(E) Whenever the Commission makes an affirmative preliminary determination under subparagraph (C), the Commission shall find the amount or extent of provisional relief that is necessary to prevent or remedy the serious injury or threat thereof. In carrying out this subparagraph, the Commission shall give preference to increasing or imposing a duty on imports, if such form of relief is feasible and would prevent or remedy the serious injury or threat thereof.

"(F) The Commission shall immediately report to the President its determination under subparagraph (C) and, if the determination is affirmative, the finding under subparagraph (E).

"(G) Within 7 days after receiving a report from the Commission under subparagraph (F) containing an affirmative determination, the President, if he considers provisional relief to be warranted and after taking into account the finding of the Commission under subparagraph (E), shall proclaim such provisional relief that the President considers necessary to prevent or remedy the serious injury or threat thereof.

"(2)(A) The Commission shall, at the same time it makes an affirmative determination under subsection (b)(3)(A) regarding the existence of critical circumstances, find the amount or extent of provisional relief that is appropriate to address such critical circumstances. The Commission shall immediately report to the President each such affirmative determination and finding.

"(B) After receiving a report from the Commission under subparagraph (A), the President shall, within 7 days after the day on which the report is received and after taking into account the finding of the Commission under subparagraph (A), proclaim such provisional relief, if any, that the President considers appropriate to address the critical circumstances.

"(3) If provisional relief is proclaimed under paragraph (1)(G) or (2)(B) in the form of an increase, or the imposition of, a duty, the President shall order the suspension of liquidation of all imported articles subject to the affirmative determination under paragraph (1)(C) or subsection (b)(1), as the case may be, that are entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the date of the determination.

"(4)(A) Any provisional relief implemented under this subsection with respect to an imported article shall terminate on the day on which—

"(i) if such relief was proclaimed under paragraph (1)(G), the Commission makes a negative determination under section 203(a) regarding injury or the threat thereof by imports of such article;

"(ii) action described in section 203(a)(3)(A) or (C) takes effect under section 203 with respect to such article;

"(iii) a decision by the President not to take any action under section 203(a) with respect to such article becomes final; or

"(iv) whenever the President determines that, because of changed circumstances, such relief is no longer warranted.

"(B) Any suspension of liquidation ordered under paragraph (3) with respect to an imported article shall terminate on the day on which provisional relief is terminated under subparagraph (A) with respect to the article.

"(C) If an increase in, or the imposition of, a duty that is proclaimed under section 203 on an imported article is different from a duty increase or imposition that was proclaimed for such an article under this section, then the entry of any such article for which liquidation was suspended under paragraph (3) shall be liquidated at whichever of such rates of duty is lower.

"(D) If provisional relief in the form of an increase in, or the imposition of, a duty is proclaimed under this section with respect to an imported article and neither a duty increase nor a duty imposition is proclaimed under section 203 regarding such article, the entry of any such article for which liquidation was suspended under paragraph (3) may be liquidated at the rate of duty that applied before provisional relief was provided.

"(5) For purposes of this subsection:

"(A) A perishable agricultural product is any agricultural article, including livestock, regarding which the Trade Representative considers action under this section to be appropriate after taking into account—

"(i) whether the article has—

"(I) a short shelf life,

"(II) a short growing season, or

"(III) a short marketing period,

"(ii) whether the article is treated as a perishable product under any other Federal law or regulation; and

"(iii) any other factor considered appropriate by the Trade Representative.

The presence or absence of any factor which the Trade Representative is required to take into account under clauses (i), (ii), or (iii) is not necessarily dispositive of whether an article is a perishable agricultural product.

"(B) The term 'provisional relief' means—

"(i) any increase in, or imposition of, any duty;

"(ii) any modification or imposition of any quantitative restriction on the importation of an article into the United States; or

"(iii) any combination of actions under clauses (i) and (ii).

"(e) Commission Recommendations.—

"(1) If the Commission makes an affirmative determination under subsection (b)(1), the Commission shall also recommend the action that would address the serious injury, or threat thereof, to the domestic industry and be most effective in facilitating the efforts of the domestic industry to make a positive adjustment to import competition.

"(2) The Commission is authorized to recommend under paragraph (1)—

"(A) an increase in, or the imposition of, any duty on the imported article;

"(B) a tariff-rate quota on the article;

"(C) a modification or imposition of any quantitative restriction on the importation of the article into the United States;

"(D) one or more appropriate adjustment measures, including the provision of trade adjustment assistance under chapter 2; or

"(E) any combination of the actions described in subparagraphs (A) through (D).

"(3) The Commission shall specify the type, amount, and duration of the action recommended by it under paragraph (1). The limitations set forth in section 203(e) are applicable to the action recommended by the Commission.

"(4) In addition to the recommendation made under paragraph (1), the Commission may also recommend that the President—

"(A) initiate international negotiations to address the underlying cause of the increase in imports of the article or otherwise to alleviate the injury or threat; or

"(B) implement any other action authorized under law that is likely to facilitate positive adjustment to import competition.

"(5) For purposes of making its recommendation under this subsection, the Commission shall—

"(A) after reasonable notice, hold a public hearing at which all interested parties shall be provided an opportunity to present testimony and evidence; and

"(B) take into account—

"(i) the form and amount of action described in paragraph (2) (A), (B), and (C) that would prevent or remedy the injury or threat thereof,

"(ii) the objectives and actions specified in the adjustment plan, if any, submitted under subsection (a)(4),

"(iii) any individual commitment that was submitted to the Commission under subsection (a)(6),

"(iv) any information available to the Commission concerning the conditions of competition in domestic and world markets, and likely developments affecting such conditions during the period for which action is being requested, and

"(v) whether international negotiations may be constructive to address the injury or threat thereof or to facilitate adjustment.

"(6) Only those members of the Commission who agreed to the affirmative determination under subsection (b) are eligible to vote on the recommendation required to be made under paragraph (1) or that may be made under paragraph (3). Members of the Commission who did not agree to the affirmative determination may submit, in the report required under subsection (f), separate views regarding what action, if any, should be taken under section 203.

"(f) Report by Commission.—

"(1) The Commission shall submit to the President a report on each investigation undertaken under subsection (b). The report shall be submitted at the earliest practicable time, but not later than 180 days after the date on which the petition is filed, the request or resolution is received, or the motion is adopted, as the case may be.

"(2) The Commission shall include in the report required under paragraph (1) the following:

"(A) The determination made under subsection (b) and an explanation of the basis for the determination.

"(B) If the determination under subsection (b) is affirmative, the recommendations for action made under subsection (e) and an explanation of the basis for each recommendation.

"(C) Any dissenting or separate views by members of the Commission regarding the determination and any recommendation referred to in subparagraphs (A) and (B).

"(D) The findings required to be included in the report under subsection (c)(2).

"(E) A copy of the adjustment plan, if any, submitted under section 201(b)(4).

"(F) Commitments submitted, and information obtained, by the Commission regarding steps that firms and workers in the domestic industry are taking, or plan to take, to facilitate positive adjustment to import competition.

"(G) A description of—

"(i) the short- and long-term effects that implementation of the action recommended under subsection (e) is likely to have on the petitioning domestic industry, on other domestic industries, and on consumers, and

"(ii) the short- and long-term effects of not taking the recommended action on the petitioning domestic industry, its workers and the communities where production facilities of such industry is located, and on other domestic industries.

"(3) The Commission, after submitting a report to the President under paragraph (1), shall promptly make it available to the public (with the exception of the confidential information obtained under section 202(a)(6)(B) and any other information which the Commission determines to be confidential) and cause a summary thereof to be published in the Federal Register.

"(g) Expedited Consideration of Adjustment Assistance Petitions.—If the Commission makes an affirmative determination under subsection (b)(1), the Commission shall promptly notify the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Commerce of the determination. After receiving such notification—

"(1) the Secretary of Labor shall give expedited consideration to petitions by workers in the domestic industry for certification for eligibility to apply for adjustment assistance under chapter 2; and

"(2) the Secretary of Commerce shall give expedited consideration to petitions by firms in the domestic industry for certification of eligibility to apply for adjustment assistance under chapter 3.

"(h) Limitations on Investigations.—

"(1) Except for good cause determined by the Commission to exist, no investigation for the purposes of this section shall be made with respect to the same subject matter as a previous investigation under this chapter, unless 1 year has elapsed since the Commission made its report to the President of the results of such previous investigation.

"(2) If an article was the subject of an investigation under this section that resulted in any action described in section 203(a)(3) (A), (B), (C), or (G) being taken under section 203, no other investigation under this chapter may be initiated with respect to such article while such action is in effect or during the period beginning on the date on which such action terminates that is equal in duration to the period during which such action was in effect.

"SEC. 203. ACTION BY PRESIDENT AFTER DETERMINATION OF IMPORT INJURY.

"(a) In General.—

"(1)(A) After receiving a report under section 202(f) containing an affirmative finding regarding serious injury, or the threat thereof, to a domestic industry, the President shall take all appropriate and feasible action within his power which the President determines will facilitate efforts by the domestic industry to make a positive adjustment to import competition and provide greater economic and social benefits than costs.

"(B) The action taken by the President under subparagraph (A) shall be to such extent, and for such duration, subject to subsection (e)(1), that the President determines to be appropriate and feasible under such subparagraph.

"(C) The interagency trade organization established under section 242(a) of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 shall, with respect to each affirmative determination reported under section 202(f), make a recommendation to the President as to what action the President should take under subparagraph (A).

"(2) In determining what action to take under paragraph (1), the President shall take into account—

"(A) the recommendation and report of the Commission;

"(B) the extent to which workers and firms in the domestic industry are—

"(i) benefitting from adjustment assistance and other manpower programs, and

"(ii) engaged in worker retraining efforts;

"(C) the efforts being made, or to be implemented, by the domestic industry (including the efforts included in any adjustment plan or commitment submitted to the Commission under section 201(b)) to make a positive adjustment to import competition;

"(D) the probable effectiveness of the actions authorized under paragraph (3) to facilitate positive adjustment to import competition;

"(E) the short- and long-term economic and social costs of the actions authorized under paragraph (3) relative to their short- and long-term economic and social benefits and other considerations relative to the position of the domestic industry in the United States economy;

"(F) other factors related to the national economic interest of the United States, including, but not limited to—

"(i) the economic and social costs which would be incurred by taxpayers, communities, and workers if import relief were not provided under this chapter,

"(ii) the effect of the implementation of actions under this section on consumers and on competition in domestic markets for articles, and

"(iii) the impact on United States industries and firms as a result of international obligations regarding compensation;

"(G) the extent to which there is diversion of foreign exports to the United States market by reason of foreign restraints;

"(H) the potential for circumvention of any action taken under this section;

"(I) the national security interests of the United States; and

"(J) the factors required to be considered by the Commission under section 202(e)(5).

"(I) take any other action which may be taken by the President under the authority of law and which the President considers appropriate and feasible for purposes of paragraph (1); and

"(J) take any combination of actions listed in subparagraphs (A) through (I).

"(4) The President shall take action under paragraph (1) within 60 days after receiving a report from the Commission containing an affirmative determination under section 202(b)(1) (or a determination under such section which he considers to be an affirmative determination by reason of section 330(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930); except that if a supplemental report is requested under paragraph (5), the President shall take action under paragraph (1) within 30 days after the supplemental report is received.

"(5) The President may, within 15 days after the date on which he receives a report from the Commission containing an affirmative determination under section 202(b)(1), request additional information from the Commission. The Commission shall, as soon as practicable but in no event more than 30 days after the date on which it receives the President's request, furnish additional information with respect to the industry in a supplemental report.

"(b) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—

"(1) On the day the President takes action under subsection (a)(1), the President shall transmit to Congress a document describing the action and the reasons for taking the action. If the action taken by the President differs from the action required to be recommended by the Commission under section 202(e)(1), the President shall state in detail the reasons for the difference.

"(2) On the day on which the President decides that there is no appropriate and feasible action to take under subsection (a)(1) with respect to a domestic industry, the President shall transmit to Congress a document that sets forth in detail the reasons for the decision.

"(3) On the day on which the President takes any action under subsection (a)(1) that is not reported under paragraph (1), the President shall transmit to Congress a document setting forth the action being taken and the reasons therefor.

"(c) IMPLEMENTATION OF ACTION RECOMMENDED BY COMMISSION.—If the President reports under subsection (b) (1) or (2) that—

"(1) the action taken under subsection (a)(1) differs from the action recommended by the Commission under section 202(e)(1); or

"(2) no action will be taken under subsection (a)(1) with respect to the domestic industry;

the action recommended by the Commission shall take effect (as provided in subsection (c)(2)) upon the enactment of a joint resolution described in section 152(a)(1)(A) within the 90-day period beginning on the date on which the document referred to in subsection (b)(1) or (2) is transmitted to the Congress.

"(d) TIME FOR TAKING EFFECT OF CERTAIN RELIEF.—

"(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), any action described in subsection (a)(3) (A), (B), or (C), that is taken under subsection (a)(1) shall take effect within 15 days after the day on which the President proclaims the action, unless the President announces, on the date he decides to take such action, his intention to negotiate one or more orderly marketing agreements in which case the action under subsection (a)(3) (A), (B), or (C) shall be proclaimed and take effect within 90 days after the date of such decision.

"(2) If the contingency set forth in subsection (c) occurs, the President shall, within 30 days after the date of the enactment of the joint resolution referred to in such subsection, proclaim the action recommended by the Commission under section 202(e)(1).

"(e) LIMITATIONS ON ACTIONS.—

"(1) (A) The duration of the period in which action taken under this section may be in effect shall not exceed 8 years.

"(B) If the initial effective period for action taken under this section is less than 8 years, the President may extend the effective period once, but the aggregate of the initial period and the extension may not exceed 8 years.

"(2) Action may be taken under subsection (a)(1)(A), (B), or (C) or under section 202(d)(2)(B) only to the extent the cumulative impact of such action does not exceed the amount necessary to prevent or remedy the serious injury or threat thereof.

"(3) No action may be taken under this section which would increase a rate of duty to (or impose a rate) which is more than 50 percent ad valorem above the rate (if any) existing at the time the action is taken.

"(4) Any action taken under this section proclaiming a quantitative restriction shall permit the importation of a quantity or value of the article which is not less than the quantity or value of such article imported into the United States during the most recent period that is representative of imports of such article.

"(5) To the extent feasible, an effective period of more than 3 years for an action described in subsection (a)(3) (A), (B), or (C) shall be phased down during the period in which the action is taken, with the first reduction taking effect no later than the close of the day which is 3 years after the day on which such action first takes effect.

"(i) item 806.30 or 807.00 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States with respect to an article; and

"(ii) the designation of any article as an eligible article for purposes of title V; shall be treated as an increase in duty.

"(B) No proclamation providing for a suspension referred to in subparagraph (A) with respect to any article may be made by the President, nor may any such suspension be recommended by the Commission under section 203(c), unless the Commission, in addition to making an affirmative determination under section 202(b)(1), determines in the course of its investigation under section 203(a) that the serious injury, or threat thereof, substantially caused by imports to the domestic industry producing a like or directly competitive article results from, as the case may be—

"(A) the application of item 806.30 or item 807.00; or

"(B) the designation of the article as an eligible article for the purposes of title V.

"(f) ORDERLY MARKETING AND OTHER AGREEMENTS.—

"(1) If the President takes action under this section other than the implementation of orderly marketing agreements, the President may, after such action takes effect, negotiate orderly marketing agreements with foreign countries, and may, after such agreements take effect, suspend or terminate, in whole or in part, any action previously taken.

"(2) If an orderly marketing agreement implemented under subsection (a) is not effective, the President may, consistent with the limitations contained in subsection (e), take additional action under subsection (a).

"(g) REGULATIONS.—

"(1) The President shall by regulation provide for the efficient and fair administration of all actions taken for the purpose of providing import relief under this chapter.

"(2) In order to carry out an orderly marketing or other international agreement concluded under this chapter, the President may prescribe regulations governing the entry or withdrawal from warehouse of articles covered by such agreement. In addition, in order to carry out any orderly marketing agreement concluded under this chapter with one or more countries accounting for a major part of United States imports of the article covered by such agreements, including imports into a major geographic area of the United States, the President may issue regulations governing the entry or withdrawal from warehouse of like articles which are the product of countries not parties to such agreement.

"(3) Regulations prescribed under this subsection shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with efficient and fair administration, insure against inequitable sharing of imports by a relatively small number of the larger importers.

"SEC. 204. MONITORING, MODIFICATION, AND TERMINATION OF ACTION.

"(a) MONITORING.—

"(1) So long as any action taken under section 203 remains in effect, the Commission shall monitor developments with respect to the domestic industry, including the progress and specific efforts made by workers and firms in the domestic industry to make a positive adjustment to import competition.

"(2) The Commission shall submit a report on the results of the monitoring under paragraph (1) to the President and to the Congress not later than—

"(A) the 2nd-anniversary of the day on which the action under section 203 first took effect; and

"(B) the last day of each 2-year period occurring after the 2-year period referred to in subparagraph (A).

"(3) In the course of preparing each report under paragraph (2), the Commission shall hold a hearing at which interested persons shall be given a reasonable opportunity to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard.

"(4) Upon request of the President, the Commission shall advise the President of its judgment as to the probable economic effect on the industry concerned of any extension, reduction, modification, or termination of the action taken under section 203 which is under consideration.

"(b) REDUCTION, MODIFICATION, AND TERMINATION OF ACTION.—

"(1) Action taken under section 203 may be reduced, modified, or terminated by the President (but not before the President receives the report required under subsection (a)(2)(A)) if the President—

"(A) after taking into account any report or advice submitted by the Commission under subsection (a) and after seeking the advice of the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Labor, determines, on the basis that either—

"(i) the domestic industry has not made adequate efforts to make a positive adjustment to import competition, or

"(ii) the effectiveness of the action taken under section 203 has been impaired by changed economic circumstances, that changed circumstances warrant such reduction, or termination; or

"(B) determines, after a majority of the representatives of the domestic industry submits to the President a petition requesting such reduction, modification, or termination on such basis, that the domestic industry has made a positive adjustment to import competition.

"(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), the President is authorized to take such additional action under section 203 as may be necessary to eliminate any circumvention of any action previously taken under such section.

"(d) EVALUATION OF EFFECTIVENESS OF ACTION.—

"(1) After any action taken under section 203 has terminated, the Commission shall evaluate the effectiveness of the actions in facilitating positive adjustment by the domestic industry to import competition, consistent with the reasons set out by the President in the report submitted to the Congress under section 203(b).

"(2) During the course of the evaluation conducted under paragraph (1), the Commission shall, after reasonable public notice, hold a hearing on the effectiveness of the action. All interested persons shall have the opportunity to attend such hearing and to present evidence or testimony at such hearing.

"(3) A report on the evaluation made under paragraph (1) and the hearings held under paragraph (2) shall be submitted by the Commission to the President and to the Congress by no later than the 180th day after the day on which the actions taken under section 203 terminated.

"(e) OTHER PROVISIONS.—

"(1) Action by the President under this chapter may be taken without regard to the provisions of section 126(a) of this Act but only after consideration of the relation of such actions to the international obligations of the United States.

"(2) If the Commission treats as the domestic industry production located in a major geographic area of the United States under section 202(c)(4)(C), then the President shall take into account the geographic concentration of domestic production and of imports in that area in taking any action authorized under paragraph (1)."

"(b)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer to the Trust Fund out of the general fund of the Treasury of the United States amounts determined by the Secretary of the Treasury to be equivalent to the amounts received into such general fund that are attributable to the duty imposed by section 287.

"(2) The amounts which are required to be transferred under paragraph (1) shall be transferred at least quarterly from the general fund of the Treasury of the United States to the Trust Fund on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the amounts referred to in paragraph (1) that are received into the Treasury. Proper adjustments shall be made in the amounts subsequently transferred to the extent prior estimates were in excess of, or less than, the amounts required to be transferred.

"(c)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall be the trustee of the Trust Fund, and shall submit an annual report to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives on the financial condition and the results of the operations of the Trust Fund during the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which such report is submitted and on the expected condition and operations of the Trust Fund during the fiscal year in which such report is submitted and the 5 fiscal years succeeding such fiscal year. Such report shall be printed as a House document of the session of the Congress to which the report is made.

"(2)(A) The Secretary of the Treasury shall invest such portion of the Trust Fund as is not, in his judgment, required to meet current withdrawals. Such investments may be made only in interest-bearing obligations of the United States. For such purpose, such obligations may be acquired—

"(B) as provided in appropriation Acts—

"(i) for expenditures that are required to carry out the provisions of chapters 2 and 3, including administrative costs, and

"(ii) for payments required under subsection (e)(2).

"(2) None of the amounts in the Trust Fund shall be available for the payment of loans guaranteed under chapter 3 or for any other expenses relating to financial assistance provided under chapter 3.

"(i) the amounts of the trade readjustment allowances that are paid under part I of subchapter B of chapter 2, and to ensure (based on estimates of the amount of funds that will be necessary to carry out chapters 2 and 3, and of the amount of revenue that will be raised by section 287, during the remainder of such fiscal year and for the fiscal year succeeding such fiscal year) that all workers and firms eligible for assistance under chapter 2 or 3 receive some assistance under chapter 2 or 3 and that the expenditures made in providing such assistance during the remainder of such fiscal year and the fiscal year succeeding such fiscal year do not exceed the amount of funds available in the Trust Fund to pay for such expenditures.

"(B) No reduction may be made under this paragraph in the amount of any trade readjustment allowance payable under part I of subchapter B of chapter 2 to any worker who received such trade readjustment allowance under such part for the week preceding the first week for which such reduction is otherwise being made under this paragraph.

"(C) If a pro rata reduction made under subparagraph (A) is in effect at the close of a fiscal year, the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Commerce, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, may adjust or modify such reduction at the beginning of the fiscal year succeeding such fiscal year, based on estimates of the amount of funds that will be necessary to carry out chapters 2 and 3, and of the amount of revenue that will be raised by section 287, during that succeeding fiscal year.

"(D) Any pro rata reduction made under subparagraph (A), and any pro rata reduction adjusted or modified under subparagraph (C), shall cease to apply after the week in which—

"(i) a 1-year period ends during which the total amount of funds that would have been expended to carry out chapters 2 and 3, including administrative costs, if such reduction were not in effect did not exceed an amount equal to 0.15 percent of the total value of all articles upon which a duty was imposed during such 1-year period, or

"(ii) the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Commerce, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, determine that the amount of funds available in the Trust Fund are sufficient to carry out chapters 2 and 3 without such reduction.

"(e)(1)(A) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Trust Fund, as repayable advances, such sums as may from time to time be necessary to make the expenditures described in subsection (d)(1)(B).

"(B) Any advance appropriated to the Trust Fund under the authority of subparagraph (A) may be paid to the Trust Fund only to the extent that the total amount of advances paid during the fiscal year to the Trust Fund from any appropriation authorized under subparagraph (A) that are outstanding after such advance is paid to the Trust Fund does not exceed the lesser of—

"(i) the excess of—

"(I) the total amount of funds that the Secretary of the Treasury (in consultation with the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Commerce) estimates will be necessary for the payments and expenditures described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (d)(1) for such fiscal year, over

"(II) the total amount of funds that the Secretary of the Treasury estimates will be available in the Trust Fund during the fiscal year (determined without regard to any advances made under this subsection during such fiscal year), or

"(ii) the excess of—

"(I) an amount equal to 0.15 percent of the total value of all articles upon which the Secretary of the Treasury estimates a duty will be imposed by section 287 during such fiscal year, over

"(II) the amount described in clause (i)(II).

"(2) Advances made to the Trust Fund from appropriations authorized under paragraph (1)(A) shall be repaid, and interest on such advances shall be paid, to the general fund of the Treasury of the United States when the Secretary of the Treasury determines that sufficient funds are available in the Trust Fund for such purposes.

"(3) Interest on advances made from appropriations authorized under paragraph (1)(A) shall be at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury (as of the close of the calendar month preceding the month in which the advance is made) to be equal to the current average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods to maturity comparable to the anticipated period during which the advance will be outstanding.".

"(j) PRIVATE ORGANIZATIONS OR GROUPS.—In addition to any advisory committee established under this section, the President shall provide adequate, timely and continuing opportunity for the submission on an informal basis (and, if such information is submitted under the provisions of subsection (g), on a confidential basis) by private organizations or groups, representing government, labor, industry, agriculture, small business, service industries, consumer interests, and others, of statistics, data and other trade information, as well as policy recommendations, pertinent to any matter referred to in subsection (a).

SEC. 1906. SENSE OF CONGRESS REQUESTING THE PRESIDENT TO INSTRUCT THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TO ENFORCE SECTION 307 OF THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930 WITHOUT DELAY.

(a) Congressional Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) its February 1983 report to the Congress on forced labor in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Department of State confirmed that Soviet forced labor is used "to produce large amounts of primary and manufactured goods for both domestic and Western export markets", and that such labor is used as an integral part of Soviet national economy;

(2) the Central Intelligence Agency has compiled a list of over three dozen products made by Soviet forced labor and imported by the United States, and that items on the September 27, 1983 list include chemicals, gold, uranium, aluminum, wood products and glassware;

(3) the International Commission on Human Rights has concluded that the Soviet Union "continues the deplorable practice of forced labor in manufacturing and construction projects" and that prisoners "are forced to work under conditions of extreme hardship including malnutrition, inadequate shelter and clothing, and severe discipline";

(4) the Congress is on record as opposing forced labor, having enacted a prohibition (in section 307 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1307)) on the importation of goods made with such labor and having passed in the Ninety-eighth Congress by unanimous vote a resolution calling such practices morally reprehensible and calling upon the President to express to the Soviet Union the opposition of the United States to such policies;

(5) the prohibition enacted by the Congress declares that "goods, wares, articles, and merchandise mined, produced or manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country by convict labor or/and forced labor or/and indentured labor under penal sanctions shall not be entitled to entry at any of the ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited";

(6) there is ample knowledge of the Soviet forced labor system to require enforcement of the prohibition contained in section 307 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1307); and

(7) the delay in enforcing the law brings into question the commitment of the United States to protest the inhumane treatment of prisoners in the Soviet Gulag, an estimated ten thousand of whom are political and religious prisoners according to the Department of State.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the President should express to the Soviet Union in the firmest possible terms the strong moral opposition of the United States to the slave labor policies of the Soviet Union by every means possible, including refusing to permit the importation into the United States of any products made in whole or in part by such labor.

(c) PRESIDENTIAL ACTION.—The President is hereby requested to instruct the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce section 307 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1307) without delay.

SEC. 1907. IMPORT MARKING PROVISIONS.

"(1) upon conviction for the first violation of this subsection, be fined not more than $100,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both; and

"(2) upon conviction for the second or any subsequent violation of this subsection, be fined not more than $250,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.".

(2)(A) The amendment made by paragraph (1) applies with respect to acts committed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(B) The conviction of a person under section 304(h) of the Tariff Act of 1930 for an act committed before the date of the enactment of this Act shall be disregarded for purposes of applying paragraph (2) of such subsection (as added by the amendment made by paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(b) MARKING OF CONTAINERS OF IMPORTED MUSHROOMS.—Imported preserved mushrooms shall not be considered to be in compliance with section 304 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1304) or any other law relating to the marking of imported articles unless the containers thereof indicate in English the country in which the mushrooms were grown.

(c) NATIVE-AMERICAN STYLE JEWELRY AND NATIVE-AMERICAN STYLE ARTS AND CRAFTS.—By no later than the date that is 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe and implement regulations under section 304 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1304) which require, to the greatest extent possible, that all Native-American style jewelry and Native-American style arts and crafts that are imported into the United States have the English name of the country of origin of such jewelry or arts and crafts indelibly marked in a conspicuous place on such jewelry or arts and crafts by a permanent method of marking.

SEC. 1908. DUTY-FREE SALES ENTERPRISES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) duty-free sales enterprises play a significant role in attracting international passengers to the United States and thereby their operations favorably affect our balance of payments;

(2) concession fees derived from the operations of authorized duty-free sales enterprises constitute an important source of revenue for the State, local and other governmental authorities that collect such fees;

(3) there is inadequate statutory and regulatory recognition of, and guidelines for the operation of, duty-free sales enterprises; and

(4) there is a need to encourage uniformity and consistency of regulation of duty-free sales enterprises.

(b) IN GENERAL.—Section 555(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1555(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) DUTY-FREE SALES ENTERPRISES.—

"(B) 25 statute miles from the exit point through which the purchaser of duty-free merchandise will depart the customs territory.

"(3) Each duty-free sales enterprise—

"(A) shall establish procedures to provide reasonable assurance that duty-free merchandise sold by the enterprise will be exported from the customs territory;

"(B) if the duty-free sales enterprise is an airport store, shall establish and enforce, in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, restrictions on the sale of duty-free merchandise to any one individual to personal use quantities;

"(C) shall display in prominent places within its place of business notices which state clearly that any duty-free merchandise purchased from the enterprise—

"(ii) if brought back into the customs territory, must be declared and is subject to Federal duty and tax; and

"(iii) is subject to the customs laws and regulation of any foreign country to which it is taken,

"(D) shall not be required to mark or otherwise place a distinguishing identifier on individual items of merchandise to indicate that the items were sold by a duty-free sales enterprise, unless the Secretary finds a pattern in which such items are being brought back into the customs territory without declaration;

"(E) may unpack merchandise into saleable units after it has been entered for warehouse and placed in a duty-free sales enterprise, without requirement of further permits; and

"(F) shall deliver duty-free merchandise—

"(i) in the case of a duty-free sales enterprise that is an airport store—

"(II) to the purchaser (or a family member or companion traveling with the purchaser) at the exit point of a specific departing flight;

"(III) by placing the merchandise within the aircraft on which the purchaser will depart for carriage as passenger baggage; or

"(IV) if the duty-free sales enterprise has made a good faith effort to effect delivery for exportation through one of the methods described in subclause (I), (II), or (III) but is unable to do so, by any other reasonable method to effect delivery; or

"(ii) in the case of a duty-free sales enterprise that is a border store—

"(I) at a merchandise storage location at or beyond the exit point; or

"(II) at any location approved by the Secretary before the date of enactment of the Omnibus Trade Act of 1987.

"(4) If a State or local or other governmental authority, incident to its jurisdiction over any airport, seaport, or other exit point facility, requires that a concession or other form of approval be obtained from that authority with respect to the operation of a duty-free sales enterprise under which merchandise is delivered to or through such facility for exportation, merchandise incident to such operation may not be withdrawn from a bonded warehouse and transferred to or through such facility unless the operator of the duty-free sales enterprise demonstrates to the Secretary that the concession or approval required for the enterprise has been obtained.

"(5) This subsection does not prohibit a duty-free sales enterprise from offering for sale and delivering to, or on behalf of, individuals departing from the customs territory merchandise other than duty-free merchandise, except that such other merchandise may not be stored in a bonded warehouse facility other than a bonded facility used for retail sales.

"(6) Merchandise that is purchased in a duty-free sales enterprise is not eligible for exemption from duty under subpart A of part 2 of schedule 8 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States if such merchandise is brought back to the customs territory.

"(7) The Secretary shall by regulation establish a separate class of bonded warehouses for duty-free sales enterprises. Regulations issued to carry out this paragraph shall take into account the unique characteristics of the different types of duty-free sales enterprises.

"(8) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) The term 'airport store' means a duty-free sales enterprise which delivers merchandise to, or on behalf of, individuals departing from the customs territory from an international airport located within the customs territory.

"(F) The term 'exit point' means the area in close proximity to an actual exit for departing from the customs territory, including the gate holding area in the case of an airport, but only if there is reasonable assurance that duty-free merchandise delivered in the gate holding area will be exported from the customs territory.

ble quantities for household or family consumption as well as for gifts to others.".

(1) the trade elements of the Caribbean Basin Initiative be strengthened in a manner consistent with the promotion of economic and political stability in the Caribbean and Central America;

(2) to the extent that Congress imposes changes that are intended to improve the competitive environment for United States industry and workers, such changes do not unduly affect the unilateral duty-free trade system available to the beneficiary countries designated under the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act; and

(1) the United States merchandise trade deficit reached the unprecedented level of $170,000,000,000 in 1986;

(6) the market-oriented sector specific (MOSS) talks on auto parts are aimed at overcoming substantial market access barriers and increasing the access of United States auto parts producers to the original and replacement parts market represented by Japanese automobiles produced in Japan, the United States, and third countries.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—The Congress—

(1) strongly supports efforts being made by United States negotiators to expand significantly the opportunities for United States automotive parts producers to supply original and replacement parts for Japanese automobiles, wherever those automobiles may be produced; and

SEC. 2208. JAPANESE IMPORTATION OF MANUFACTURED GOODS FROM LESS DEVELOPED COUNTRIES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) Japan's merchandise trade surplus rose from $62,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1985 to $101,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1986;

(2) these surpluses pose a grave threat to the free trade system;

(3) Japan's most important contribution to the international trading system would be to commit itself as a nation to import with vigor, just as it has exported with vigor in recent decades;

(4) Japan should particularly increase its imports of manufactured goods; and

(5) Japan's share of the exports of less developed countries has declined from 10.6 percent in 1979 to below 8 percent in 1985.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) by taking its proportionate share of the manufactured exports of developing countries, Japan will promote not only its economic development but the economic conditions conducive to democracy;

(2) expanding markets for the manufactured exports of less developed countries will directly benefit the United States, and, if less developed countries are able to increase exports to Japan, these countries will be able to earn more of the hard currency needed to service their foreign debt obligations and make the investments necessary to chart a course of solid economic growth; and

(3) if less developed countries are able to export manufactured goods to Japan, they will be under less pressure to divert exports to the United States market.

"(C) No loan guaranteed to any one borrower may exceed 50 percent of the cost of the activity to be financed, or $3,000,000, whichever is less, as determined by the agency.

"(D) No loan may be guaranteed unless the agency determines that the lender is responsible and that adequate provision is made for servicing the loan on reasonable terms and protecting the financial interest of the United States.

"(E) The fees earned from the loan guarantees issued under this subsection shall be deposited in the revolving fund account as part of the guarantee reserve established under paragraph (5) of this subsection. Fees shall be assessed at a level such that the fees received, plus the funds from the revolving fund account placed in the guarantee reserve, satisfy the requirements of paragraph (5). Fees shall be reviewed every twelve months to ensure that the fees assessed on new loan guarantees are at the required level.

"(F) Any guarantee shall be conclusive evidence that such guarantee has been properly obtained, and that the underlying loan as contracted qualifies for such guarantee. Except for fraud or material misrepresentation for which the parties seeking payment under such guarantee are responsible, such guarantee shall be presumed to be valid, legal, and enforceable.

"(G) The agency shall determine that the standards used by the lender for assessing the credit risk of new and existing guaranteed loans are reasonable. The agency shall require that there be a reasonable assurance of repayment before credit assistance is extended.

"(H) Commitments to guarantee loans may be made by the agency only to the extent that the total loan principal, any part of which is guaranteed, will not exceed the amount specified in annual appropriations Acts.

"(3) To the extent that fees are not sufficient as specified under paragraph (2)(E) to cover expected future liabilities, appropriations are authorized to maintain an appropriate reserve.

"(4) The losses guaranteed under this subsection may be in dollars or in other currencies. In the case of loans in currencies other than dollars, the guarantees issued shall be subject to an overall payment limitation expressed in dollars.

"(5) The agency shall segregate in the revolving fund account and hold as a reserve an amount estimated to be sufficient to cover the agency's expected net liabilities on the loan guarantees outstanding under this subsection; except that the amount held in reserve shall not be less than 25 percent of the principal amount of the agency's outstanding contingent liabilities on such guarantees. The concurrence or approval of any other department or agency is not required before any such revision is made. The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register any revisions in the list, with an explanation of the reasons for the revisions. The Secretary shall further assess, as part of each review, the availability from sources outside the United States of goods and technology comparable to those subject to export controls imposed under this section. All goods and technology on the list shall be reviewed at least once each year. "(i) any such export controls on those goods or technology for which a determination of the Secretary that there is no foreign availability has been made under subsection (f) or (h)(6) of this section before the end of the applicable 6-month period and is in effect may be renewed for periods of not more than 6 months each, and "(A) shall determine the truth of the allegation;

"(C) shall, pursuant to such review, submit a finding for publication in the Federal Register.

In such finding, the Secretary shall identify those goods or technology which shall remain on the control list and those goods or technology which shall be removed from the control list. "(B) the exporter removes the good from the People's Republic of China no later than at the conclusion of the trade show.".

SEC. 2418. FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 5(f) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2404(f)) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—

"(1) FOREIGN AVAILABILITY TO CONTROLLED COUNTRIES.—(A) The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense and other appropriate Government agencies and with appropriate technical advisory committees established pursuant to subsection (h) of this section, shall review, on a continuing basis, the availability to controlled countries, from sources outside the United States, including countries which participate with the United States in multilateral export controls, of any goods or technology the export of which requires a validated license under this section. In any case in which the Secretary determines, in accordance with procedures and criteria which the Secretary shall by regulation establish, that any such goods or technology are available in fact to controlled countries from such sources in sufficient quantity and of comparable quality so that the requirement of a validated license for the export of such goods or technology is or would be ineffective in achieving the purpose set forth in subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary may not, after the determination is made, require a validated license for the export of such goods or technology during the period of such foreign availability, unless the President determines that the absence of export controls under this section on the goods or technology would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. In any case in which the President determines under this paragraph that export controls under this section must be maintained notwithstanding foreign availability, the Secretary shall publish that determination, together with a concise statement of its basis and the estimated economic impact of the decision.

"(B) The Secretary shall approve any application for a validated license which is required under this section for the export of any goods or technology to a controlled country and which meets all other requirements for such an application, if the Secretary determines that such goods or technology will, if the license is denied, be available in fact to such country from sources outside the United States, including countries which participate with the United States in multilateral export controls, in sufficient quantity and of comparable quality so that denial of the license would be ineffective in achieving the purpose set forth in subsection (a) of this section, unless the President determines that approving the license application would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. In any case in which the Secretary makes a determination of foreign availability under this subparagraph with respect to any goods or technology, the Secretary shall determine whether a determination of foreign availability under subparagraph (A) with respect to such goods or technology is warranted.

"(2) FOREIGN AVAILABILITY TO OTHER THAN CONTROLLED COUNTRIES.—(A) The Secretary shall review, on a continuing basis, the availability to countries other than controlled countries, from sources outside the United States, of any goods or technology the export of which requires a validated license under this section. If the Secretary determines, in accordance with procedures which the Secretary shall establish, that any goods or technology in sufficient quantity and of comparable quality are available in fact from sources outside the United States (other than availability under license from a country which maintains export controls on such goods or technology cooperatively with the United States pursuant to the agreement of the group known as the Coordinating Committee or pursuant to an agreement described in subsection (k) of this section), the Secretary may not, after the determination is made and during the period of such foreign availability, require a validated license for the export of such goods or technology to any country (other than a controlled country) to which the country from which the goods or technology is available does not place controls on the export of such goods or technology. The requirement with respect to a validated license in the preceding sentence shall not apply if the President determines that the absence of export controls under this section on the goods or technology would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. In any case in which the President determines under this paragraph that export controls under this section must be maintained notwithstanding foreign availability, the Secretary shall publish that determination, together with a concise statement of its basis and the estimated economic impact of the decision.

"(B) The Secretary shall approve any application for a validated license which is required under this section for the export of any goods or technology to a country (other than a controlled country) and which meets all other requirements for such an application, if the Secretary determines that such goods or technology are available from foreign sources to that country under the criteria established in subparagraph (A), unless the President determines that approving the license application would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. In any case in which the Secretary makes a determination of foreign availability under this subparagraph with respect to any goods or technology, the Secretary shall determine whether a determination of foreign availability under subparagraph (A) with respect to such goods or technology is warranted.

"(3) PROCEDURES FOR MAKING DETERMINATIONS.—(A) The Secretary shall make a foreign availability determination under paragraph (1) or (2) on the Secretary's own initiative or upon receipt of an allegation from an export license applicant that such availability exists. In making any such determination, the Secretary shall accept the representations of applicants made in writing and supported by reasonable evidence, unless such representations are contradicted by reliable evidence, including scientific or physical examination, expert opinion based upon adequate factual information, or intelligence information. In making determinations of foreign availability, the Secretary may consider such factors as cost, reliability, the availability and reliability of spare parts and the cost and quality thereof, maintenance programs, durability, quality of end products produced by the item proposed for export, and scale of production. For purposes of this subparagraph, 'evidence' may include such items as foreign manufacturers' catalogues, brochures, or operations or maintenance manuals, articles from reputable trade publications, photographs, and depositions based upon eyewitness accounts.

"(B) In a case in which an allegation is received from an export license applicant, the Secretary shall, upon receipt of the allegation, submit for publication in the Federal Register notice of such receipt. Within 4 months after receipt of the allegation, the Secretary shall determine whether the foreign availability exists, and shall so notify the applicant. If the Secretary has determined that the foreign availability exists, the Secretary shall, upon making such determination, submit the determination for review to other departments and agencies as the Secretary considers appropriate. The Secretary's determination of foreign availability does not require the concurrence or approval of any official, department, or agency to which such a determination is submitted. Not later than 1 month after the Secretary makes the determination, the Secretary shall respond in writing to the applicant and submit for publication in the Federal Register, that—

"(i) the foreign availability does exist and—

"(I) the requirement of a validated license has been removed,

"(II) the President has determined that export controls under this section must be maintained notwithstanding the foreign availability and the applicable steps are being taken under paragraph (4), or

"(III) in the case of a foreign availability determination under paragraph (1), the foreign availability determination will be submitted to a multilateral review process in accordance with the agreement of the Coordinating Committee for a period of not more than 4 months beginning on the date of the publication; or

"(ii) the foreign availability does not exist.

In any case in which the submission for publication is not made within the time period specified in the preceding sentence, the Secretary may not thereafter require a license for the export of the goods or technology with respect to which the foreign availability allegation was made. In the case of a foreign availability determination under paragraph (1) to which clause (i)(III) applies, no license for such export may be required after the end of the 9-month period beginning on the date on which the allegation is received.

"(4) NEGOTIATIONS TO ELIMINATE FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—(A) In any case in which export controls are maintained under this section notwithstanding foreign availability, on account of a determination by the President that the absence of the controls would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States, the President shall actively pursue negotiations with the governments of the appropriate foreign countries for the purpose of eliminating such availability. No later than the commencement of such negotiations, the President shall notify in writing the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives that he has begun such negotiations and why he believes it is important to national security that export controls on the goods or technology involved be maintained.

"(B) If, within 6 months after the President's determination that export controls be maintained, the foreign availability has not been eliminated, the Secretary may not, after the end of that 6-month period, require a validated license for the export of the goods or technology involved. The President may extend the 6-month period described in the preceding sentence for an additional period of 12 months if the President certifies to the Congress that the negotiations involved are progressing and that the absence of the export controls involved would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. Whenever the President has reason to believe that goods or technology subject to export controls for national security purposes by the United States may become available from other countries to controlled countries and that such availability can be prevented or eliminated by means of negotiations with such other countries, the President shall promptly initiate negotiations with the governments of such other countries to prevent such foreign availability.

"(C) After an agreement is reached with a country pursuant to negotiations under this paragraph to eliminate or prevent foreign availability of goods or technology, the Secretary may not require a validated license for the export of such goods or technology to that country.

"(5) EXPEDITED LICENSES FOR ITEMS AVAILABLE TO COUNTRIES OTHER THAN CONTROLLED COUNTRIES.—(A) In any case in which the Secretary finds that any goods or technology from foreign sources is of similar quality to goods or technology the export of which requires a validated license under this section and is available to a country other than a controlled country without effective restrictions, the Secretary shall designate such goods or technology as eligible for export to such country under this paragraph.

"(B) In the case of goods or technology designated under subparagraph (A), then 20 working days after the date of formal filing with the Secretary of an individual validated license application for the export of those goods or technology to an eligible country, a license for the transaction specified in the application shall become valid and effective and the goods or technology are authorized for export pursuant to such license unless the license has been denied by the Secretary on account of an inappropriate end user. The Secretary may extend the 20-day period provided in the preceding sentence for an additional period of 15 days if the Secretary requires additional time to consider the application and so notifies the applicant.

"(C) The Secretary may make a foreign availability determination under subparagraph (A) on the Secretary's own initiative, upon receipt of an allegation from an export license applicant that such availability exists, or upon the submission of a certification by a technical advisory committee of appropriate jurisdiction that such availability exists. Upon receipt of such an allegation or certification, the Secretary shall publish notice of such allegation or certification in the Federal Register and shall make the foreign availability determination within 30 days after such receipt and publish the determination in the Federal Register. In the case of the failure of the Secretary to make and publish such determination within that 30-day period, the goods or technology involved shall be deemed to be designated as eligible for export to the country or countries involved, for purposes of subparagraph (B).

"(D) The provisions of paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) do not apply with respect to determinations of foreign availability under this paragraph.

"(6) OFFICE OF FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—The Secretary shall establish in the Department of Commerce an Office of Foreign Availability, which shall be under the direction of the Under Secretary of Commerce for Export Administration. The Office shall be responsible for gathering and analyzing all the necessary information in order for the Secretary to make determinations of foreign availability under this Act. The Secretary shall make available to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate at the end of each 6-month period during a fiscal year, information on the operations of the Office, and on improvements in the Government's ability to assess foreign availability, during that 6-month period, including information on the training of personnel, the use of computers, and the use of Commercial Service Officers of the United States and Foreign Commercial Service. Such information shall also include a description of representative determinations made under this Act during that 6-month period that foreign availability did or did not exist (as the case may be), together with an explanation of such determinations.

"(7) SHARING OF INFORMATION.—Each department or agency of the United States, including any intelligence agency, and all contractors with any such department or agency, shall, upon the request of the Secretary and consistent with the protection of intelligence sources and methods, furnish information to the Office of Foreign Availability concerning foreign availability of goods and technology subject to export controls under this Act. Each such department or agency shall allow the Office of Foreign Availability access to any information from a laboratory or other facility within such department or agency.

"(8) REMOVAL OF CONTROLS ON LESS SOPHISTICATED GOODS OR TECHNOLOGY.—In any case in which Secretary may not, pursuant to paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) of this subsection or paragraph (6) of subsection (h) of this section, require a validated license for the export of goods or technology, then the Secretary may not require a validated license for the export of any similar goods or technology whose function, technological approach, performance thresholds, and other attributes that form the basis for export controls under this section do not exceed the technical parameters of the goods or technology from which the validated license requirement is removed under the applicable paragraph.

"(9) NOTICE OF ALL FOREIGN AVAILABILITY ASSESSMENTS.—Whenever the Secretary undertakes a foreign availability assessment under this subsection or subsection (h)(6), the Secretary shall publish notice of such assessment in the Federal Register.

"(10) AVAILABILITY DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection and subsections (f) and (h), the term 'available in fact to controlled countries' includes production or availability of any goods or technology in any country—

"(A) from which the goods or technology is not restricted for export to any controlled country; or

"(B) in which such export restrictions are determined by the Secretary to be ineffective.

For purposes of subparagraph (B), the mere inclusion of goods or technology on a list of goods or technology subject to bilateral or multilateral national security export controls shall not alone constitute credible evidence that a country provides an effective means of controlling the export of such goods or technology to controlled countries.".

(b) TECHNICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE DETERMINATIONS.—Section 5(h)(6) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2404(h)(6)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "After an agreement is reached with a country pursuant to negotiations under this paragraph to eliminate foreign availability of goods or technology, the Secretary may not require a validated license for the export of such goods or technology to that country.".

(c) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 14(a)(8) of the Act (50 U.S.C. 2413(a)(8)) is amended by striking "5(f)(5)" and inserting "5(f)(6)".

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(2)(A) In carrying out this subsection, the Secretary shall conduct annual reviews of the performance levels of goods or technology—

"(i) which are eligible for export under a distribution license,

"(ii) below which exports to the People's Republic of China require only notification of the governments participating in the group known as the Coordinating Committee, and

"(iii) below which no authority or permission to export may be required under subsection (b)(2) or (b)(3) of this section.

The Secretary shall make appropriate adjustments to such performance levels based on these reviews.

"(B) In any case in which the Secretary receives a request which—

"(i) is to revise the qualification requirements or minimum thresholds of any goods eligible for export under a distribution license, and

"(ii) is made by an exporter of such goods, representatives of an industry which produces such goods, or a technical advisory committee established under subsection (h) of this section, the Secretary, after consulting with other appropriate Government agencies and technical advisory committees established under subsection (h) of this section, shall determine whether to make such revision, or some other appropriate revision, in such qualification requirements or minimum thresholds. In making this determination, the Secretary shall take into account the availability of the goods from sources outside the United States. The Secretary shall make a determination on a request made under this subparagraph within 90 days after the date on which the request is filed. If the Secretary's determination pursuant to such a request is to make a revision, such revision shall be implemented within 120 days after the date on which the request is filed and shall be published in the Federal Register.".

"(m) GOODS CONTAINING CONTROLLED PARTS AND COMPONENTS.—Export controls may not be imposed under this section, or under any other provision of law, on a good solely on the basis that the good contains parts or components subject to export controls under this section if such parts or components—

"(1) are essential to the functioning of the good,

"(2) are customarily included in sales of the good in countries other than controlled countries, and

"(3) comprise 25 percent or less of the total value of the good,

Such alternatives include private discussions with foreign leaders, public statements in situations where private diplomacy is unavailable or not effective, withdrawal of ambassadors, and reduction of the size of the diplomatic staff that the country involved is permitted to have in the United States.".

"(B)(i) Without regard to the provisions of paragraphs (1) through (3) of this subsection, but subject to clause (ii), up to 50 percent of all refined petroleum products, and partially refined petroleum products, which are produced, from crude oil subject to the prohibition contained in paragraph (1), by an oil refinery described in subparagraph (A) during the 1-year period beginning on the date on which the refinery commences commercial operations, and during each 1-year period occurring successively thereafter, may be exported. For purposes of determining, under this clause, the percentage of refined petroleum products and partially refined petroleum products of a refinery that are exported, there shall be excluded sales of refined petroleum products or partially refined petroleum products to any military department of the United States or to any air carrier as defined in section 101 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1301), and such sales shall not be subject to subparagraph (A) except to the extent provided in clause (ii).

"(D) Within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, the Secretary shall issue such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this paragraph and paragraph (5).

"(5) The provisions of paragraphs (1) through (4) of this subsection shall not apply to the export of ethane, propane, or butane separated from crude oil that is subject to the prohibition contained in paragraph (1) and that has passed through a separation facility, except that the crude oil remaining after such separation shall not be considered to be a refined petroleum product or partially refined petroleum product and shall continue to be subject to the provisions of paragraph (1) through (3) of this subsection.

"(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section or any other provision of law, including subsection (u) of section 28 of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 185(u)), during any period when the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement, signed on January 2, 1988, is in force and effect, up to a maximum volume of 50,000 barrels per day, on an annual average basis, of crude oil subject to the prohibition contained in paragraph (1) may be exported to Canada, subject to the condition that such crude oil be transported to Canada from a suitable location within the lower 48 States.".

(2) REQUIREMENTS OF STUDY.—Recognizing the need to minimize the disruption of United States trading interests while preventing Western technology from enhancing the development of the military capabilities of controlled countries, the study shall—

(A) identify those goods and technologies which are likely to make crucial differences in the military capabilities of controlled countries, and identify which of those goods and technologies controlled countries already possess or are available to controlled countries from other sources;

(C) demonstrate how such criteria would be applied to the control list by the relevant agencies to revise the list, eliminate ineffective controls, and strengthen controls;

PART II—MULTILATERAL EXPORT CONTROL ENHANCEMENT

SEC. 2441. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the "Multilateral Export Control Enhancement Amendments Act".

SEC. 2442. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The diversion of advanced milling machinery to the Soviet Union by the Toshiba Machine Company and Kongsberg Trading Company has had a serious impact on United States and Western security interests.

(2) United States and Western security is undermined without the cooperation of the governments and nationals of all countries participating in the group known as the Coordinating Committee (hereafter in this part referred to as "COCOM") in enforcing the COCOM agreement.

(3) It is the responsibility of all governments participating in COCOM to place in effect strong national security export control laws, to license strategic exports carefully, and to enforce those export control laws strictly, since the COCOM system is only as strong as the national laws and enforcement on which it is based.

(4) It is also important for corporations to implement effective internal control systems to ensure compliance with export control laws.

(5) In order to protect United States national security, the United States must take steps to ensure the compliance of foreign companies with COCOM controls, including, where necessary conditions have been met, the imposition of sanctions against violators of controls commensurate with the severity of the violation.

SEC. 2443. MANDATORY SANCTIONS AGAINST TOSHIBA AND KONGSBERG.

(a) SANCTIONS AGAINST TOSHIBA MACHINE COMPANY, KONGSBERG TRADING COMPANY, AND CERTAIN OTHER FOREIGN PERSONS.—(1) The President shall impose, for a period of 3 years—

(1) a prohibition on contracting with, and procurement of products and services from—

(A) Toshiba Machine Company and Kongsberg Trading Company, and

(B) any other foreign person whom the President finds to have knowingly facilitated the diversion of advanced milling machinery by Toshiba Machine Company and Kongsberg Trading Company to the Soviet Union, by any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government; and

(2) a prohibition on the importation into the United States of all products produced by Toshiba Machine Company, Kongsberg Trading Company, and any foreign person described in paragraph (1)(B).

(b) SANCTIONS AGAINST TOSHIBA CORPORATION AND KONGSBERG VAAPENFABRIKK.—The President shall impose, for a period of 3 years, a prohibition on contracting with, and procurement of products and services from, the Toshiba Corporation and Kongsberg Vaapenfabrikk, by any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government.

(c) EXCEPTIONS.—The President shall not apply sanctions under this section—

(1) in the case of procurement of defense articles or defense services—

(A) under existing contracts or subcontracts, including exercise of options for production quantities to satisfy United States operational military requirements;

(B) if the President determines that the company or foreign person to whom the sanctions would otherwise be applied is a sole source supplier of essential defense articles or services and no alternative supplier can be identified; or

(C) if the President determines that such articles or services are essential to the national security under defense coproduction agreements; or

(2) to—

(A) products or services provided under contracts or other binding agreements (as such terms are defined by the President in regulations) entered into before June 30, 1987;

(B) spare parts;

(C) component parts, but not finished products, essential to United States products or production;

(D) routine servicing and maintenance of products; or

(E) information and technology.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "component part" means any article which is not usable for its intended functions without being imbedded or integrated into any other product and which, if used in production of a finished product, would be substantially transformed in that process;

(2) the term "finished product" means any article which is usable for its intended functions without being imbedded in or integrated into any other product, but in no case shall such term be deemed to include an article produced by a person other than a sanctioned person that contains parts or components of the sanctioned person if the parts or components have been substantially transformed during production of the finished product; and

(3) the term "sanctioned person" means a company or other foreign person upon whom prohibitions have been imposed under subsection (a) or (b).

"SEC. 11A. (a) DETERMINATION BY THE PRESIDENT.—The President, subject to subsection (c), shall apply sanctions under subsection (b) for a period of not less than 2 years and not more than 5 years, if the President determines that—

"(1) a foreign person has violated any regulation issued by a country to control exports for national security purposes pursuant to the agreement of the group known as the Coordinating Committee, and

"(2) such violation has resulted in substantial enhancement of Soviet and East bloc capabilities in submarine or antisubmarine warfare, ballistic or antiballistic missile technology, strategic aircraft, command, control, communications and intelligence, or other critical technologies as determined by the President, on the advice of the National Security Council, to represent a serious adverse impact on the strategic balance of forces.

The President shall notify the Congress of each action taken under this section. This section, except subsections (h) and (j), applies only to violations that occur after the date of the enactment of the Export Enhancement Act of 1988.

"(c) EXCEPTIONS.—The President shall not apply sanctions under this section—

"(1) in the case of procurement of defense articles or defense services—

"(A) under existing contracts or subcontracts, including the exercise of options for production quantities to satisfy United States operational military requirements;

"(B) if the President determines that the foreign person or other entity to which the sanctions would otherwise be applied is a sole source supplier of essential defense articles or services and no alternative supplier can be identified; or

"(C) if the President determines that such articles or services are essential to the national security under defense coproduction agreements; or

"(2) to—

"(A) products or services provided under contracts or other binding agreements (as such terms are defined by the President in regulations) entered into before the date on which the President notifies the Congress of the intention to impose the sanctions;

"(B) spare parts;

"(C) component parts, but not finished products, essential to United States products or production;

"(D) routine servicing and maintenance of products; or

"(E) information and technology.

"(d) EXCLUSION.—The President shall not apply sanctions under this section to a parent, affiliate, subsidiary, and successor entity of a foreign person if the President determines that—

"(1) the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity (as the case may be) has not knowingly violated the export control regulation violated by the foreign person, and

"(2) the government of the country with jurisdiction over the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity had in effect, at the time of the violation by the foreign person, an effective export control system consistent with principles agreed to in the Coordinating Committee, including the following:

"(A) national laws providing appropriate civil and criminal penalties and statutes of limitations sufficient to deter potential violations;

"(B) a program to evaluate export license applications that includes sufficient technical expertise to assess the licensing status of exports and ensure the reliability of end-users;

"(C) an enforcement mechanism that provides authority for trained enforcement officers to investigate and prevent illegal exports;

"(D) a system of export control documentation to verify the movement of goods and technology; and

"(E) procedures for the coordination and exchange of information concerning violations of the agreement of the Coordinating Committee.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(2) the term 'finished product' means any article which is usable for its intended functions without being imbedded or integrated into any other product, but in no case shall such term be deemed to include an article produced by a person other than a sanctioned person that contains parts or components of the sanctioned person if the parts or components have been substantially transformed during production of the finished product; and

"(3) the term 'sanctioned person' means a foreign person, and any parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity of the foreign person, upon whom sanctions have been imposed under this section.

"(f) SUBSEQUENT MODIFICATIONS OF SANCTIONS.—The President may, after consultation with the Congress, limit the scope of sanctions applied to a parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity of the foreign person determined to have committed the violation on account of which the sanctions were imposed if the President determines that—

"(1) the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity (as the case may be) has not, on the basis of available evidence, itself violated the export control regulation involved, either directly or through a course of conduct;

"(2) the government with jurisdiction over the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity has improved its export control system as measured by the criteria set forth in subsection (d)(2);

"(3) the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity, has instituted improvements in internal controls sufficient to detect and prevent violations of the export control regime implemented under paragraph (2); and

"(4) the impact of the sanctions imposed on the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity is proportionate to the increased defense expenditures imposed on the United States.

Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the President may not limit the scope of the sanction referred to in subsection (b)(1) with respect to the parent of the foreign person determined to have committed the violation, until that sanction has been in effect for at least 2 years.

"(g) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—The President shall include in the annual report submitted under section 14, a report on the status of any sanctions imposed under this section, including any exceptions, exclusions, or modifications of sanctions that have been applied under subsection (c), (d), or (f).

"(h) DISCRETIONARY IMPOSITION OF SANCTIONS.—If the President determines that a foreign person has violated a regulation issued by a country to control exports for national security purposes pursuant to the agreement of the group known as the Coordinating Committee, but in a case in which subsection (a)(2) may not apply, the President may apply the sanctions referred to in subsection (b) against that foreign person for a period of not more than 5 years.

"(i) COMPENSATION FOR DIVERSION OF MILITARILY CRITICAL TECHNOLOGIES TO CONTROLLED COUNTRIES.—(1) In cases in which sanctions have been applied against a foreign person under subsection (a), the President shall initiate discussions with the foreign person and the government with jurisdiction over that foreign person regarding compensation on the part of the foreign person in an amount proportionate to the costs of research and development and procurement of new defensive systems by the United States and the allies of the United States to counteract the effect of the technological advance achieved by the Soviet Union as a result of the violation by that foreign person.

"(2) The President shall, at the time that discussions are initiated under paragraph (1), report to the Congress that such discussions are being undertaken, and shall report to the Congress the outcome of those discussions.

"(j) OTHER ACTIONS BY THE PRESIDENT.—Upon making a determination under subsection (a) or (h), the President shall—

"(1) initiate consultations with the foreign government with jurisdiction over the foreign person who committed the violation involved, in order to seek prompt remedial action by that government;

"(2) initiate discussions with the governments participating in the Coordinating Committee regarding the violation and means to ensure that similar violations do not occur; and

"(3) consult with and report to the Congress on the nature of the violation and the actions the President proposes to take, or has taken, to rectify the situation.

"(k) DAMAGES FOR CERTAIN VIOLATIONS.—(1) In any case in which the President makes a determination under subsection (a), the Secretary of Defense shall determine the costs of restoring the military preparedness of the United States on account of the violation involved. The Secretary of Defense shall notify the Attorney General of his determination, and the Attorney General may bring an action for damages, in any appropriate district court of the United States, to recover such costs against the person who committed the violation, any person that is owned or controlled by the person who committed the violation, and any person who owns and controls the person who committed the violation.

"(3) The total amount awarded in any case brought under paragraph (2) shall be determined by the court in light of the facts and circumstances, but shall not exceed the amount of the net loss to the national security of the United States. TITLE III—INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL POLICY

Subtitle A—Exchange Rates and International Economic Policy Coordination

SEC. 3001. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Exchange Rates and International Economic Policy Coordination Act of 1988".

SEC. 3002. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the macroeconomic policies, including the exchange rate policies, of the leading industrialized nations require improved coordination and are not consistent with long-term economic growth and financial stability;

(2) currency values have a major role in determining the patterns of production and trade in the world economy;

(3) the rise in the value of the dollar in the early 1980's contributed substantially to our current trade deficit;

(4) exchange rates among major trading nations have become increasingly volatile and a pattern of exchange rates has at times developed which contribute to substantial and persistent imbalances in the flow of goods and services between nations, imposing serious strains on the world trading system and frustrating both business and government planning;

(5) capital flows between nations have become very large compared to trade flows, respond at times quickly and dramatically to policy and economic changes, and, for these reasons, contribute significantly to uncertainty in financial markets, the volatility of exchange rates, and the development of exchange rates which produce imbalances in the flow of goods and services between nations;

(6) policy initiatives by some major trading nations that manipulate the value of their currencies in relation to the United States dollar to gain competitive advantage continue to create serious competitive problems for United States industries;

(7) a more stable exchange rate for the dollar at a level consistent with a more appropriate and sustainable balance in the United States current account should be a major focus of national economic policy;

(8) procedures for improving the coordination of macroeconomic policy need to be strengthened considerably; and

(9) under appropriate circumstances, intervention by the United States in foreign exchange markets as part of a coordinated international strategic intervention effort could produce more orderly adjustment of foreign exchange markets and, in combination with necessary macroeconomic policy changes, assist adjustment toward a more appropriate and sustainable balance in current accounts.

SEC. 3003. STATEMENT OF POLICY.

It is the policy of the United States that—

(1) the United States and the other major industrialized countries should take steps to continue the process of coordinating monetary, fiscal, and structural policies initiated in the Plaza Agreement of September 1985;

(2) the goal of the United States in international economic negotiations should be to achieve macroeconomic policies and exchange rates consistent with more appropriate and sustainable balances in trade and capital flows and to foster price stability in conjunction with economic growth;

(3) the United States, in close coordination with the other major industrialized countries should, where appropriate, participate in international currency markets with the objective of producing more orderly adjustment of foreign exchange markets and, in combination with necessary macroeconomic policy changes, assisting adjustment toward a more appropriate and sustainable balance in current accounts; and

(4) the accountability of the President for the impact of economic policies and exchange rates on trade competitiveness should be increased.

SEC. 3004. INTERNATIONAL NEGOTIATIONS ON EXCHANGE RATE AND ECONOMIC POLICIES.

(a) MULTILATERAL NEGOTIATIONS.—The President shall seek to confer and negotiate with other countries—

(1) to achieve—

(A) better coordination of macroeconomic policies of the major industrialized nations; and

(B) more appropriate and sustainable levels of trade and current account balances, and exchange rates of the dollar and other currencies consistent with such balances; and

(2) to develop a program for improving existing mechanisms for coordination and improving the functioning of the exchange rate system to provide for long-term exchange rate stability consistent with more appropriate and sustainable current account balances.

(b) BILATERAL NEGOTIATIONS.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall analyze on an annual basis the exchange rate policies of foreign countries, in consultation with the International Monetary Fund, and consider whether countries manipulate the rate of exchange between their currency and the United States dollar for purposes of preventing effective balance of payments adjustments or gaining unfair competitive advantage in international trade. If the Secretary considers that such manipulation is occurring with respect to countries that (1) have material global current account surpluses; and (2) have significant bilateral trade surpluses with the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury shall take action to initiate negotiations with such foreign countries on an expedited basis, in the International Monetary Fund or bilaterally, for the purpose of ensuring that such countries regularly and promptly adjust the rate of exchange between their currencies and the United States dollar to permit effective balance of payments adjustments and to eliminate the unfair advantage. The Secretary shall not be required to initiate negotiations in cases where such negotiations would have a serious detrimental impact on vital national economic and security interests; in such cases, the Secretary shall inform the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives of his determination.

SEC. 3005. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) REPORTS REQUIRED.—In furtherance of the purpose of this title, the Secretary, after consultation with the Chairman of the Board, shall submit to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate, on or before October 15 of each year, a written report on international economic policy, including exchange rate policy. The Secretary shall provide a written update of developments six months after the initial report. In addition, the Secretary shall appear, if requested, before both committees to provide testimony on these reports.

(b) CONTENTS OF REPORT.—Each report submitted under subsection (a) shall contain—

(1) an analysis of currency market developments and the relationship between the United States dollar and the currencies of our major trade competitors;

(2) an evaluation of the factors in the United States and other economies that underlie conditions in the currency markets, including developments in bilateral trade and capital flows;

(3) a description of currency intervention or other actions undertaken to adjust the actual exchange rate of the dollar;

(4) an assessment of the impact of the exchange rate of the United States dollar on—

(A) the ability of the United States to maintain a more appropriate and sustainable balance in its current account and merchandise trade account;

(B) production, employment, and noninflationary growth in the United States;

(C) the international competitive performance of United States industries and the external indebtedness of the United States;

(5) recommendations for any changes necessary in United States economic policy to attain a more appropriate and sustainable balance in the current account;

(6) the results of negotiations conducted pursuant to section 3004;

(7) key issues in United States policies arising from the most recent consultation requested by the International Monetary Fund under article IV of the Fund's Articles of Agreement; and

(8) a report on the size and composition of international capital flows, and the factors contributing to such flows, including, where possible, an assessment of the impact of such flows on exchange rates and trade flows.

(c) REPORT BY BOARD OF GOVERNORS.—Section 2A(1) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 225a(1)) is amended by inserting after "the Nation" the following: ", including an analysis of the impact of the exchange rate of the dollar on those trends".

SEC. 3006. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this subtitle:

(1) Secretary.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury.

(2) Board.—The term "Board" means the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Subtitle B—International Debt

PART I—FINDINGS, PURPOSES, AND STATEMENT OF POLICY

SEC. 3101. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "International Debt Management Act of 1988".

SEC. 3102. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the international debt problem threatens the safety and soundness of the international financial system, the stability of the international trading system, and the economic development of the debtor countries;

(2) orderly reduction of international trade imbalances requires very substantial growth in all parts of the world economy, particularly in the developing countries;

(3) growth in developing countries with substantial external debts has been significantly constrained over the last several years by a combination of high debt service obligations and insufficient new flows of financial resources to these countries;

(4) substantial interest payment outflows from debtor countries, combined with inadequate net new capital inflows, have produced a significant net transfer of financial resources from debtor to creditor countries;

(5) negative resource transfers at present levels severely depress both investment and growth in the debtor countries, and force debtor countries to reduce imports and expand exports in order to meet their debt service obligations;

(6) current adjustment policies in debtor countries, which depress domestic demand and increase production for export, help to depress world commodity prices and limit the growth of export markets for United States industries;

(7) the United States has borne a disproportionate share of the burden of absorbing increased exports from debtor countries, while other industrialized countries have increased their imports from developing countries only slightly;

(8) current approaches to the debt problem should not rely solely on new lending as a solution to the debt problem, and should focus on other financing alternatives including a reduction in current debt service obligations;

(9) new international mechanisms to improve the management of the debt problem and to expand the range of financing options available to developing countries should be explored; and

(10) industrial countries with strong current account surpluses have a disproportionate share of the world's capital resources, and bear an additional responsibility for contributing to a viable long-term solution to the debt problem.

SEC. 3103. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this subtitle are—

(1) to expand the world trading system and raise the level of exports from the United States to the developing countries in order to reduce the United States trade deficit and foster economic expansion and an increase in the standard of living throughout the world;

(2) to alleviate the current international debt problem in order to make the debt situation of developing countries more manageable and permit the resumption of sustained growth in those countries; and

(3) to increase the stability of the world financial system and ensure the safety and soundness of United States depository institutions.

SEC. 3104. STATEMENT OF POLICY.

It is the policy of the United States that—

(1) increasing growth in the developing world is a major goal of international economic policy;

(2) it is necessary to broaden the range of options in dealing with the debt problem to include improved mechanisms to restructure existing debt;

(3) active consideration of a new multilateral authority to improve the management of the debt problem and to share the burdens of adjustment more equitably must be undertaken; and

(4) countries with strong current account surpluses bear a major responsibility for providing the financial resources needed for growth in the developing world.

PART II—THE INTERNATIONAL DEBT MANAGEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 3111. INTERNATIONAL INITIATIVE.

(a) Directive.—

(1) Study.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall study the feasibility and advisability of establishing the International Debt Management Authority described in this section.

(2) Explanation of determinations.—If the Secretary of the Treasury determines that initiation of international discussions with regard to such authority would (A) result in material increase in the discount at which sovereign debt is sold, (B) materially increase the probability of default on such debt, or (C) materially enhance the likelihood of debt service failure or disruption, the Secretary shall include in his interim reports to the Congress an explanation in detail of the reasons for such determination.

(3) Initiation of discussions.—Unless such a determination is made, the Secretary of the Treasury shall initiate discussions with such industrialized and developing countries as the Secretary may determine to be appropriate with the intent to negotiate the establishment of the International Debt Management Authority, which would undertake to—

(A) purchase sovereign debt of less developed countries from private creditors at an appropriate discount;

(B) enter into negotiations with the debtor countries for the purpose of restructuring the debt in order to—

(i) ease the current debt service burden on the debtor countries; and

(ii) provide additional opportunities for economic growth in both debtor and industrialized countries; and

(C) assist the creditor banks in the voluntary disposition of their Third World loan portfolio.

(b) Objectives.—In any discussions initiated under subsection (a), the Secretary should include the following specific proposals:

(1) That any loan restructuring assistance provided by such an authority to any debtor nation should involve substantial commitments by the debtor to (A) economic policies designed to improve resource utilization and minimize capital flight, and (B) preparation of an economic management plan calculated to provide sustained economic growth and to allow the debtor to meet its restructured debt obligations.

(2) That support for such an authority should come from industrialized countries, and that greater support should be expected from countries with strong current account surpluses.

(3) That such an authority should have a clearly defined close working relationship with the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the various regional development banks.

(4) That such an authority should be designed to operate as a self-supporting entity, requiring no routine appropriation of resources from any member government, and to function subject to the prohibitions contained in the first sentence of section 3112(a).

(5) That such an authority should have a defined termination date and a clear proposal for the restoration of creditworthiness to debtor countries within this timeframe.

(c) Interim Reports.—At the end of the 6-month period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and at the end of the 12-month period beginning on such date of enactment, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit a report on the progress being made on the study or in discussions described in subsection (a) to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and shall consult with such committees after submitting each such report.

(d) Final Report.—On the conclusion of the study or of discussions described in subsection (a), the Secretary shall transmit a report containing a detailed description thereof to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, together with such recommendations for legislation which the Secretary may determine to be necessary or appropriate for the establishment of the International Debt Management Authority.

SEC. 3112. ACTIONS TO FACILITATE CREATION OF THE AUTHORITY.

(a) In General.—No funds, appropriations, contributions, callable capital, financial guarantee, or any other financial support or obligation or contingent support or obligation on the part of the United States Government may be used for the creation, operation, or support of the International Debt Management Authority specified in section 3111, without the express approval of the Congress through subsequent law, nor shall any expenses associated with such authority, either directly or indirectly, accrue to any United States person without the consent of such person. Except as restricted in the preceding sentence, the Secretary of the Treasury shall review all potential resources available to the multilateral financial institutions which could be used to support the creation of the International Debt Management Authority. In the course of this review, the Secretary shall direct—

(1) the United States Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund to determine the amount of, and alternative methods by which, gold stock of the Fund which, subject to action by its Board of Governors, could be pledged as collateral to obtain financing for the activities of the authority specified in section 3111; and

(2) the United States Executive Director to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to determine the amount of, and alternative methods by which, liquid assets controlled by such Bank and not currently committed to any loan program which, subject to action by its Board of Governors, could be pledged as collateral for obtaining financing for the activities of the authority specified in section 3111.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall include a report on the results of the review in the first report submitted under section 3111(c).

(b) CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION.—Subsection (a) shall not be construed to affect any provision of the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund or of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development or any agreement entered into under either of such Agreements.

SEC. 3113. IMF-WORLD BANK REVIEW.

(a) IMF REVIEW.—The United States Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund shall request the management of the International Monetary Fund to prepare a review and analysis of the debt burden of the developing countries, with particular attention to alternatives for dealing with the debt problem including new lending instruments, rescheduling and refinancing of existing debt, securitization and debt conversion techniques, discounted debt repurchases, and the International Debt Management Authority described in section 3111 no later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) WORLD BANK REVIEW.—The United States Executive Director to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development shall request the management of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to prepare a review and analysis of the debt burden of the developing countries, with particular attention to alternatives for dealing with the debt problem including new lending instruments, rescheduling and refinancing of existing debt, securitization and debt conversion techniques, discounted debt repurchases, and the International Debt Management Authority described in section 3111 no later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

PART III—REGULATORY PROVISIONS AFFECTING INTERNATIONAL DEBT

SEC. 3121. PROVISIONS RELATING TO THE REGULATION OF DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.

(a) REGULATORY OBJECTIVES.—It is the sense of the Congress that regulations prescribed by Federal banking regulatory agencies which affect the international assets of United States commercial banks should grant the widest possible latitude to the banks for negotiating principal and interest reductions with respect to obligations of heavily indebted sovereign borrowers.

(b) FLEXIBILITY IN DEBT RESTRUCTURING.—It is the intent of the Congress that, in applying generally accepted accounting standards, Federal agencies which regulate and oversee the operations of depository institutions (within the meaning given to such term by clauses (i) through (vi) of section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act) apply to such institutions maximum flexibility in determining the asset value of restructured loans to heavily indebted sovereign borrowers and in accounting for the effects of such restructuring prospectively.

(c) RECAPITALIZATION.—It is the intent of the Congress that Federal agencies which regulate and oversee the operations of depository institutions (within the meaning given to such term by clauses (i) through (vi) of section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act) should require depository institutions with substantial amounts of loans to heavily indebted sovereign borrowers to seek, as appropriate, expanded recapitalization through equity financing to ensure that prudent institutional capital-to-total asset ratios are established and maintained.

(d) RESERVES FOR LOAN LOSSES.—It is the intent of the Congress that Federal agencies which regulate and oversee the operations of depository institutions (within the meaning given to such term by clauses (i) through (vi) of section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act) should seek to ensure that appropriate levels of reserves be established by depository institutions engaged in substantial lending to heavily indebted sovereign borrowers in accordance with both the credit and country risks associated with such lending.

(e) DATA ON BANKS FOREIGN LOAN RISKS.—Section 913 of the International Lending Supervision Act of 1983 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) To ensure that Congress is fully informed of the risks to our banking system posed by troubled foreign loans, the Federal banking agencies, before March 31, 1989, and on April 30 of each succeeding year, shall jointly submit to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives a report that shall include the following:

"(1) The level of loan exposure of those banking institutions under the jurisdiction of each agency which is rated 'value-impaired', 'substandard', 'other transfer risk problems', or in any other troubled debt category as may be established by the banking agencies. This tabulation shall clearly identify aggregate loan exposures of the 9 largest United States banks under the agencies' jurisdiction, the aggregate loan exposures of the next 13 largest banks, and the aggregate exposure of all other such banks which have significant country risk exposures. This tabulation shall include a separate section identifying, to the extent feasible, new bank loans to countries with debt service problems which were made within the past year preceding the date on which the report required under this subsection is due, and shall include the amount of sovereign loans written off or sold by such banks during the preceding year.

"(2) Progress that has been achieved by the appropriate Federal banking agencies and by banking institutions in reducing the risk to the economy of the United States posed by the exposure of banking institutions to troubled international loans through appropriate voluntary or regulatory policies, including increases in capital and reserves of banking institutions.

"(3) The relationship between lending activity by the United States banks and foreign banks in countries experiencing debt service difficulties and exports from the United States and other lending countries to these markets, and the extent to which United States banking institutions can be encouraged to continue to make credit available to finance necessary growth in international trade, and particularly to finance United States exports.

"(4) The response of regulatory agencies in other countries to the international debt problems, including measures which encourage the building of capital and reserves by foreign banking institutions, tax treatment of reserves, encouragement of new lending to promote international trade, and measures which may place United States banking institutions at a competitive disadvantage when compared with foreign banking institutions.

"(5) Steps that have been taken during the previous year by countries experiencing debt service difficulties to enhance conditions for private direct investment (including investment by United States persons) and to eliminate production subsidies, attain price stability, and undertake such other steps as will remove the causes of their debt service difficulties.

Each appropriate Federal banking agency may provide data in the aggregate to the extent necessary to preserve the integrity and confidentiality of the regulatory and examination process.".

SEC. 3122. STUDIES RELATING TO THE REGULATION OF DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.

(a) REGULATORY STUDY REQUIRED.—The Comptroller of the Currency, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall conduct a study to determine the extent of any regulatory obstacle to negotiated reductions in the debt service obligations associated with foreign debt.

(b) SPECIFIC FACTORS TO BE STUDIED.—The study required by subsection (a) shall include an analysis of regulatory and accounting obstacles to various forms of debt restructuring, including negotiated interest reduction, the amortization of loan losses, securitization and debt conversion techniques, and discounted debt repurchases, as well as an analysis of the profitability of commercial bank lending to developing countries during the 10-year period ending on December 31, 1986. The analysis should include an assessment of the impact of the various forms of debt restructuring on the development of a secondary market in developing country debt and on the safety and soundness of the United States banking system.

(c) REPORT REQUIRED.—Within 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall transmit to the Congress a report containing the findings and conclusions of such agencies with respect to the study required under subsection (a), together with any recommendations concerning legislation which such agencies determine to be necessary or appropriate to remove regulatory obstacles to negotiated reductions in the debt service obligations associated with sovereign debt.

SEC. 3123. LIMITED PURPOSE SPECIAL DRAWING RIGHTS FOR THE POOREST HEAVILY INDEBTED COUNTRIES.

(a) STUDY REQUIRED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the directors and staff of the International Monetary Fund and such other interested parties as the Secretary may determine to be appropriate, shall conduct a study of the feasibility and the efficacy of reducing the international debt of the poorest of the heavily indebted countries through a one-time allocation by the International Monetary Fund of limited purpose Special Drawing Rights to such countries in accordance with a plan which provides that—

(A) the allocation be made without regard to the quota established for any such country under the Articles of Agreement of the Fund;

(B) limited purpose Special Drawing Rights be used only to repay official debt of any such country;

(C) the allocation of limited purpose Special Drawing Rights to any such country not be treated as an allocation on which such country must pay interest to the Fund; and

(D) the use of limited purpose Special Drawing Rights by any such country to repay official debt shall be treated as an allocation of regular Special Drawing Rights to the creditor.

(2) ADDITIONAL FACTORS TO BE STUDIED.—The study required under paragraph (1) shall include the following:

(A) To the extent the creation and allocation of the limited purpose Special Drawing Rights described in paragraph (1) would require an amendment of the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund, an assessment of the period of time within which such amendment could be ratified by the member nations, based on discussions with the major members of the Fund.

(B) An assessment of other means for achieving the objectives of principal and interest reduction on official debt of the poorest heavily indebted countries through the use of Special Drawing Rights.

(C) A comparative evaluation of proposals of other members of the International Monetary Fund, the directors and staff of the Fund, and other interested parties.

(D) An analysis of the effect the implementation of the provisions in paragraph (1) would have on bilateral and multilateral lenders, the international monetary system, and such other provisions of this Act as may be appropriate.

(E) A comparative analysis of the available alternatives identified under subparagraph (B) or (C).

(b) Report Required.—Within 3 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit a report to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate containing the findings and conclusions of the Secretary pursuant to the study required under subsection (a), together with—

(1) the recommendation of the Secretary as to which, of all the alternatives for providing relief for the poorest of the heavily indebted countries which were assessed in connection with such study, represents the best available option; and

(2) recommendations for such legislation and administrative action as the Secretary determines to be necessary and appropriate to implement such option.

Subtitle D—Export-Import Bank and Tied Aid Credit Amendments

SEC. 3301. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Export-Import Bank and Tied Aid Credit Amendments of 1988".

SEC. 3302. PROVISIONS RELATING TO TIED AID CREDIT.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) negotiations have led to an international agreement to increase the grant element required in tied aid credit offers;

(2) concern continues to exist that countries party to the agreement may continue to offer tied aid credits that deviate from the agreement;

(3) in such cases, the United States could continue to lose export sales in connection with the aggressive, and in some cases, unfair, tied aid practices of such countries; and

(4) in such cases, the Export-Import Bank of the United States should continue to use the Tied Aid Credit Fund established by section 15(c) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 to discourage the use of such predatory financing practices.

(b) Extension of Tied Aid Credit Fund.—Subsections (c)(2) and (e)(1) of section 15 of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 (12 U.S.C. 635i-3 (c)(2) and (e)(1)) are each amended by striking out "and 1988" and inserting in lieu thereof "1988, and 1989".

(c) Report.—

(1) In general.—On or before December 31, 1988, the President and Chairman of the Export-Import Bank of the United States, in cooperation with other appropriate government agencies, shall submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate a written report identifying and analyzing the tied aid credit practices of other countries and shall make recommendations for dealing with such practices.

(2) Consultation.—In preparing the report described in paragraph (1), the Export-Import Bank shall consult with appropriate international organizations such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund, and the Development Assistance Committee of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, and with the countries which are party to the Arrangement on Guidelines for Officially Supported Export Credits adopted by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development in November 1987.

SEC. 3303. REPORT ON UNITED STATES EXPORTS TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES.

Within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President and Chairman of the Export-Import Bank of the United States shall submit to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs of the Senate a written report which contains—

(1) an assessment of the effectiveness of recent program changes in increasing United States exports to developing countries; and

(2) an identification of additional specific policy and program changes which—

(A) would enable the Bank to increase the financing of United States exports to developing countries; and

(B) would encourage greater private sector participation in such financing efforts.

SEC. 3304. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 2(e) OF THE EXPORT-IMPORT BANK ACT OF 1945.

(a) Time for Determining Supplies.—Section 2(e)(1)(A)(i) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 (12 U.S.C. 635(e)(1)(A)(i)) is amended by striking out "productive capacity is expected to become operative" and inserting in lieu thereof "commodity will first be sold".

(b) Making Comparative Injury Determinations.—Section 2(e)(2) of such Act (12 U.S.C. 635(e)(2)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "short- and long-term" before "injury to United States producers"; and

(2) by inserting "and employment" before "of the same, similar, or competing commodity".

(c) Substantial Injury Defined for Export-Import Bank Determinations.—Section 2(e) of such Act (12 U.S.C. 635(e)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(3) Definition.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(B), the extension of any credit or guarantee by the Bank will cause substantial injury if the amount of the capacity for production established, or the amount of the increase in such capacity expanded, by such credit or guarantee equals or exceeds 1 percent of United States production.".

"(G) DETERMINATION OF STATUS AS EXPORT TRADING COMPANY.—

"(i) Time period requirements.—For purposes of determining whether an export trading company is operated principally for the purposes described in subparagraph (F)(i)—

"(II) not less than 4 consecutive years of operations of such company (not including any portion of the period referred to in sub-clause (I)) shall be taken into account in making any such determination.

"(ii) EXPORT REVENUE REQUIREMENTS.—A company shall not be treated as operated principally for the purposes described in subparagraph (F)(i) unless—

"(I) the revenues of such company from the export, or facilitating the export, of goods or services produced in the United States exceed the revenues of such company from the import, or facilitating the import, into the United States of goods or services produced outside the United States; and

"(II) at least ⅓ of such company's total revenues are revenues from the export, or facilitating the export, of goods or services produced in the United States by persons not affiliated with such company.".

(b) LEVERAGE.—Section 4(c)(14)(A) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843(c)(14)(A)) is amended by redesignating clauses (v) and (vi) as clauses (vi) and (vii), respectively, and by inserting after clause (iv) the following new clause:

"(v) LEVERAGE.—The Board may not disapprove any proposed investment solely on the basis of the anticipated or proposed asset-to-equity ratio of the export trading company with respect to which such investment is proposed, unless the anticipated or proposed annual average asset-to-equity ratio is greater than 20-to-1.".

(c) INVENTORY.—Section 4(c)(14)(A)) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843(c)(14)) is amended by inserting after subparagraph (G) (as added by subsection (a) of this section) the following new subparagraph:

"(i) NO GENERAL LIMITATION.—The Board may not prescribe by regulation any maximum dollar amount limitation on the value of goods which an export trading company may maintain in inventory at any time.

"(ii) SPECIFIC LIMITATION BY ORDER.—Notwithstanding clause (i), the Board may issue an order establishing a maximum dollar amount limitation on the value of goods which a particular export trading company may maintain in inventory at any time (after such company has been operating for a reasonable period of time) if the Board finds that, under the facts and circumstances, such limitation is necessary to prevent risks that would affect the financial or managerial resources of an investor bank holding company to an extent which would be likely to have a materially adverse effect on the safety and soundness of any subsidiary bank of such bank holding company.".

Subtitle F—Primary Dealers

SEC. 3501. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Primary Dealers Act of 1988".

SEC. 3502. REQUIREMENT OF NATIONAL TREATMENT IN UNDERWRITING GOVERNMENT DEBT INSTRUMENTS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) United States companies can successfully compete in foreign markets if they are given fair access to such markets;

(2) a trade surplus in services could offset the deficit in manufactured goods and help lower the overall trade deficit significantly;

(3) in contrast to the barriers faced by United States firms in Japan, Japanese firms generally have enjoyed access to United States financial markets on the same terms as United States firms; and

(4) United States firms seeking to compete in Japan face or have faced a variety of discriminatory barriers effectively precluding such firms from fairly competing for Japanese business, including—

(A) limitations on membership on the Tokyo Stock Exchange;

(B) high fixed commission rates (ranging as high as 80 percent) which must be paid to members of the exchange by nonmembers for executing trades;

(C) unequal opportunities to participate in and act as lead manager for equity and bond underwritings;

(D) restrictions on access to automated teller machines;

(E) arbitrarily applied employment requirements for opening branch offices;

(F) long delays in processing applications and granting approvals for licenses to operate; and

(G) restrictions on foreign institutions' participation in Ministry of Finance policy advisory councils.

(b) DESIGNATION OF CERTAIN PERSONS AS PRIMARY DEALERS PROHIBITED.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—Neither the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System nor the Federal Reserve Bank of New York may designate, or permit the continuation of any prior designation of, any person of a foreign country as a primary dealer in government debt instruments if such foreign country does not accord to United States companies the same competitive opportunities in the underwriting and distribution of government debt instruments issued by such country as such country accords to domestic companies of such country.

(2) CERTAIN PRIOR ACQUISITIONS EXCEPTED.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to the continuation of the prior designation of a company as a primary dealer in government debt instruments if—

(A) such designation occurred before July 31, 1987; and

(B) before July 31, 1987—

(i) control of such company was acquired from a person (other than a person of a foreign country) by a person of a foreign country; or

(ii) in conjunction with a person of a foreign country, such company informed the Federal Reserve Bank of New York of the intention of such person to acquire control of such company.

(c) EXCEPTION FOR COUNTRIES HAVING OR NEGOTIATING BILATERAL AGREEMENTS WITH THE UNITED STATES.—Subsection (b) shall not apply to any person of a foreign country if—

(1) that country, as of January 1, 1987, was negotiating a bilateral agreement with the United States under the authority of section 102(b)(4)(A) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2112(b)(4)(A)); or

(2) that country has a bilateral free trade area agreement with the United States which entered into force before January 1, 1987.

(d) PERSON OF A FOREIGN COUNTRY DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, a person is a "person of a foreign country" if that person, or any other person which directly or indirectly owns or controls that person, is a resident of that country, is organized under the laws of that country, or has its principal place of business in that country.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall take effect 12 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The report shall focus on those countries in which there are significant denials of national treatment which impact United States financial firms. The report shall also describe the progress of discussions pursuant to section 3603.

SEC. 3603. FAIR TRADE IN FINANCIAL SERVICES.

(a) DISCUSSIONS.—When advantageous the President or his designee shall conduct discussions with the governments of countries that are major financial centers, aimed at:

TITLE IV—AGRICULTURAL TRADE

SEC. 4001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Agricultural Competitiveness and Trade Act of 1988".

Subtitle A—Findings, Policy, and Purpose

SEC. 4101. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) United States agricultural exports have declined by more than 36 percent since 1981, from $43,800,000,000 in 1981 to $27,900,000,000 in 1987;

(2) the United States share of the world market for agricultural commodities and products has dropped by 20 percent during the last 6 years;

(3) for the first time in 15 years, the United States incurred monthly agricultural trade deficits in 1986;

(4) the loss of $1,000,000,000 in United States agricultural exports causes the loss of 35,000 agricultural jobs and the loss of 60,000 nonagricultural jobs;

(5) the loss of agricultural exports threatens family farms and the economic well-being of rural communities in the United States;

(6) factors contributing to the loss of United States agricultural exports include changes in world agricultural markets such as—

(A) the addition of new exporting nations;

(B) innovations in agricultural technology;

(C) increased use of export subsidies designed to lower the price of commodities on the world market;

(D) the existence of barriers to agricultural trade;

(E) the slowdown in the growth of world food demand in the 1980's due to cyclical economic factors, including currency fluctuations and a debt-related slowdown in the economic growth of agricultural markets in certain developing countries; and

(F) the rapid buildup of surplus stocks as a consequence of favorable weather for agricultural production during the 1980's;

(7) increasing the volume and value of exports is important to the financial well-being of the farm sector in the United States and to increasing farm income in the United States;

(8) in order to increase agricultural exports and improve prices for farmers and ranchers in the United States, it is necessary that all agricultural export programs of the United States be used in an expeditious manner, including programs established under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1691 et seq.), the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714 et seq.), and section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1431);

(9) greater use should be made by the Secretary of Agriculture of the authorities established under the section 4 of the Food for Peace Act of 1966 (7 U.S.C. 1707a), the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1691 et seq.), section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1431), and the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714 et seq.) to provide intermediate credit financing and other assistance for the establishment of facilities in importing countries to—

(A) improve the handling, marketing, processing, storage, and distribution of imported agricultural commodities and products; and

(B) increase livestock production to enhance the demand for United States feed grains;

(10) food aid and export assistance programs in developing countries stimulate economic activity which causes incomes to rise, and, as incomes rise, diets improve and the demand for and ability to purchase food increases;

(11) private voluntary organizations and cooperatives are important and successful partners in our food aid and development programs; and

(12) in addition to meeting humanitarian needs, food aid used in sales and barter programs by private voluntary organizations and cooperatives—

(A) provides communities with health care, credit systems, and tools for development; and

(B) establishes the infrastructure that is essential to the expansion of markets for United States agricultural commodities and products.

SEC. 4102. POLICY.

It is the policy of the United States—

(1) to provide, through all possible means, agricultural commodities and products for export at competitive prices, with full assurance of quality and reliability of supply;

(2) to support the principle of free trade and the promotion of fair trade in agricultural commodities and products;

(3) to support fully the negotiating objectives set forth in section 1101(b) of this Act to eliminate or reduce substantially constraints on fair and open trade in agricultural commodities and products;

(4) to use statutory authority to counter unfair foreign trade practices and to use all available means, including export promotion programs, and, if necessary, restrictions on United States imports of agricultural commodities and products, in order to encourage fair and open trade; and

(5) to provide for increased representation of United States agricultural trade interests in the formulation of national fiscal and monetary policy affecting trade.

SEC. 4103. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this title—

(1) to increase the effectiveness of the Department of Agriculture in agricultural trade policy formulation and implementation and in assisting United States agricultural producers to participate in international agricultural trade, by strengthening the operations of the Department of Agriculture; and

(2) to improve the competitiveness of United States agricultural commodities and products in the world market.

(a) CERTIFICATION TO CONGRESS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if, before January 1, 1990, a law has not been enacted in accordance with section 151 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2191) that implements an agreement negotiated under the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations conducted under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (hereinafter in this section referred to as "GATT negotiations") concerning agricultural trade, the President, not later than 45 days after such date—

(1) shall submit a report to the Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Finance of the Senate describing the status of the GATT negotiations concerning agricultural trade, the progress that has been made to date in the negotiations, the general areas of disagreement, the anticipated date of completion of the negotiations, and the changes in domestic farm programs that are likely to be necessary on conclusion of the negotiations; and

(2) shall certify to Congress whether or not significant progress has been made in the negotiations.

(b) MARKETING LOAN.—

(1) IMPLEMENTATION.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), if the President does not certify that significant progress has been made towards reaching a GATT agreement concerning agricultural trade, the President shall, not later than 60 days before the beginning of the marketing year for the 1990 crop of wheat, instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to permit producers to repay loans made under sections 107D(a), 105C(a), and 201(i) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445b-3(a), 1444e(a), and 1446(i)) for each of the 1990 crops of wheat, feed grains, and soybeans at a level that is the lesser of—

(2) WAIVER.—The President may waive the application of paragraph (1) by certifying to Congress that implementation of the marketing loan would harm further negotiations.

(3) DISCONTINUANCE.—If, after the implementation of a marketing loan in accordance with paragraph (1), the President certifies to Congress that substantial progress is being made in the GATT negotiations and that continuation of the marketing loan program implemented in accordance with paragraph (1) would harm such progress, the President may instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to discontinue the marketing loan program.

(c) EXPORT ENHANCEMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (4), if the President exercises the authority to waive or discontinue the marketing loan program provided for in paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (b), the President shall instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to make agricultural commodities and products acquired by the Commodity Credit Corporation equaling at least $2,000,000,000 in value available during the 1990 through 1992 fiscal years to United States exporters of domestically produced agricultural commodities and products for the purpose of making exports of such commodities and products available on the world market at competitive prices.

"(A) provide direct technical assistance to the United States forest products industry to improve marketing activities;

"(B) provide cost-share grants to States to support State and regional forest products marketing programs; and

SEC. 4501. STUDY OF CANADIAN WHEAT IMPORT LICENSING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) Canadian importers of wheat or products containing a minimum of 25 percent wheat (except packaged wheat products for retail sale) from the United States must obtain import licenses from the Canadian Wheat Board;

(2) the Canadian Wheat Board requires such importers of United States wheat and wheat products to prove that the wheat or wheat products to be imported are not readily available in Canada before issuance of an import license, and therefore, for all practical purposes, such licenses are not granted by the Canadian Wheat Board;

(3) the licensing requirements of the Canadian Wheat Board's import licensing program result in a trade barrier on the importation of United States wheat and wheat products; and

(4) Canada is a member of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and, under such agreement, member countries should, in general, eliminate import licensing programs that operate as nontariff trade barriers.

(b) STUDY.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct a study of the Canadian Wheat Board's import licensing program to—

(1) assess the effect of the Canadian Wheat Board's import licensing program referred to in subsection (a) on wheat producers, processors, and exporters in the United States; and

(2) determine—

(B) the estimated effect of the Canadian Wheat Board's import licensing program in reducing exports of United States wheat and wheat products to Canada.

(c) SUBMISSION OF RESULTS.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit the results of the study conducted under subsection (b) to the United States Trade Representative.

(d) CONSULTATION WITH CONGRESS.—Not later than 90 days after the results of the study are submitted, the Secretary and the United States Trade Representative shall consult with the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on the status of efforts to negotiate the elimination of such Canadian licensing requirements.

(b) COMPILATION AND REPORT ON CONSUMPTION.—The Secretary shall compile and report to the public data on the total quantity of production and consumption of domestically produced raw and processed agricultural products.

(c) ISSUING OF DATA.—The reports required by this section shall be made in a format that correlates statistics for the quantity and value of imported agricultural products to the production and consumption of domestic agricultural products. In conducting this study, the Secretary shall assess the likelihood of other nations' agreeing to reduce or eliminate their domestic dairy price stabilization, export subsidization, or import control programs in such multilateral negotiations.

(b) REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit a report describing the results of the study, together with any recommendations, to the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a study with respect to—

(1) whether articles containing dairy products (including chocolate in blocks of at least 10 pounds and other such products) are being imported into the United States in such a manner or in such quantities as to circumvent or avoid the limitations imposed on imports of dairy products under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 624), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937; and

(2) whether products containing refined sugar are being imported into the United States in such a manner or in such quantities as to circumvent or avoid the limitations imposed on imports of refined sugar and sugar containing products imposed under Federal law.

"(B) The term 'standards' means inspection, building construction, sanitary, quality, species verification, residue, and other standards that are applicable to meat articles.

"(2) On request of the Committee on Agriculture or the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives or the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry or the Committee on Finance of the Senate, or at the initiative of the Secretary, the Secretary shall, as soon as practicable, determine whether a particular foreign country applies standards for the importation of meat articles from the United States that are not related to public health concerns about end-product quality that can be substantiated by reliable analytical methods.

"(3) If the Secretary determines that a foreign country applies standards described in paragraph (2)—

"(A) the Secretary shall consult with the United States Trade Representative; and

"(B) within 30 days after the determination of the Secretary under paragraph (2), the Secretary and the United States Trade Representative shall recommend to the President whether action should be taken under paragraph (4).

"(4) Within 30 days after receiving a recommendation for action under paragraph (3), the President shall, if and for such time as the President considers appropriate, prohibit imports into the United States of any meat articles produced in such foreign country unless it is determined that the meat articles produced in that country meet the standards applicable to meat articles in commerce within the United States.

"(5) The action authorized under paragraph (4) may be used instead of, or in addition to, any other action taken under any other law.".

(b) REPORTS.—Section 20(e) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (4);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

SEC. 4605. STUDY OF INTERNATIONAL MARKETING IN LAND GRANT COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES.

It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) land grant colleges and universities (as defined in section 1404(10) of the National Agricultural Research, Extension, and Teaching Policy Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 3103(10)) should encourage the study and career objective of international marketing of agricultural commodities and products;

(2) because marketing complements production, international agricultural marketing specialists are needed in a globally competitive world; and

(3) enhanced foreign marketing of United States agricultural commodities and products will help relieve stress in the rural economy.

SEC. 4606. INTERNATIONAL TRADE IN EGGS AND EGG PRODUCTS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the system of basic and variable levies of the European Community has severely restricted the export of United States eggs and egg products to European Community member countries;

(2) export subsidies of the European Community have caused displacement of United States egg exports in international markets; and

(3) the Secretary of Agriculture is in the process of certifying the Netherland's inspection procedures for egg products for the purpose of importation into the United States of egg products of the Netherlands.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the United States Trade Representative should enter into negotiations with the European Community concerning—

(1) duties, tariffs, and other means used by the European Community to limit the access of United States eggs and egg products to European Community markets; and

(2) European Community export subsidies that have had the effect of excluding United States eggs and egg products from other world markets.

SEC. 4607. UNITED STATES ACCESS TO THE KOREAN BEEF MARKET.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the 1986 United States trade deficit with the Republic of Korea was $7,600,000,000;

(2) the Republic of Korea has banned beef imports since May 1985;

(3) this beef import ban is in contravention of Korea's obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and impairs United States rights under such agreement;

(4) Korea imposes an unreasonably high 20 percent ad valorem tariff on meat products; and

(5) if the Korean beef market were liberalized, the United States, due to comparative advantage, could supply a significant portion of the Korean market for beef, thereby increasing profit opportunities for the United States beef industry while benefiting Korean consumers.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the Republic of Korea should take immediate action to fulfill its obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and permit access to its market for United States beef;

(2) the United States should aggressively pursue negotiations to gain access to the Korean market for United States beef;

(3) such negotiations, in addition to elimination of the beef import ban, should address the high tariffs set by the Republic of Korea and the means by which imported beef is distributed in Korea; and

(4) if the Republic of Korea does not show clear evidence that it is engaging in meaningful liberalization of its market for United States beef, the United States should use all available and appropriate means to encourage the Republic of Korea to open its market to United States beef imports.

SEC. 4608. UNITED STATES ACCESS TO JAPANESE AGRICULTURAL MARKETS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the United States requested establishment of a panel pursuant to Article XXIII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (hereinafter in this section referred to as "GATT") to examine Japanese import restrictions on 12 categories of agricultural products;

(2) the GATT panel found that Japanese quantitative restrictions on 10 of the 12 product categories are inconsistent with Article XI of the GATT and recommended that Japan eliminate them or otherwise take action to bring them into conformity with the GATT; and

(3) the rationale behind the GATT panel finding can also be applied to other restrictions that Japan maintains on imports from the United States, including—

(A) a virtual ban on imports of United States rice;

(B) a very restrictive quota on imports of United States beef; and

(C) high tariffs and restrictive quotas on imports of United States citrus.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the Government of Japan should immediately take actions to comply with the findings of the GATT panel report;

(2) the Government of Japan should immediately liberalize its trade policies by lowering high tariffs and removing quotas on agricultural imports from the United States, including those imposed on rice, beef, and citrus, in order to avoid any damage to the close relations between Japan and the United States; and

(3) the United States should continue efforts to persuade the Government of Japan to remove its trade barriers.

SEC. 4609. SENSE OF CONGRESS RELATING TO SECTION 22.

It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the amounts of assessments collected under the no-net-cost tobacco program can be an indicator of import injury and material interference with the tobacco price support program administered by the Secretary of Agriculture; and

(2) for purposes of any investigation conducted under section 22(a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 624(a)), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, with respect to tobacco, or articles containing tobacco, imported into the United States, the International Trade Commission should take into account, as if they are costs to the Federal government, contributions and assessments imposed under sections 106A and 106B of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445-1 and 1445-2) in determining whether such imported tobacco or articles containing tobacco materially interfere with the tobacco price support program carried out by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(D) focus its testing resources for monitoring pesticide residues in food on detecting those residues which pose a public health concern,

(E) prepare summaries of the information listed in subsection (b), and

(F) provide information to assist the Environmental Protection Agency in carrying out its responsibilities under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act and the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

(2) As soon as practicable, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall develop a means to enable the computerized data management systems placed into effect under paragraph (1) to make the summary described in subsection (c).

(3)(A) Paragraph (1) does not limit the authority of the Food and Drug Administration to—

(i) use the computerized data management systems placed in effect under paragraph (1), or

(ii) develop additional data management systems, to facilitate the regulation of any substance or product covered under the requirements of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

(B) In placing into effect the computerized data management systems under paragraph (1) and in carrying out paragraph (2), the Secretary shall comply with applicable regulations governing computer system design and procurement.

(1) information on—

(A) the types of imported and domestically produced food products analyzed for compliance with the requirements of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act regarding the presence of pesticide residues,

(B) the number of samples of each such food product analyzed for such compliance by country of origin,

(C) the pesticide residues which may be detected using the testing methods employed,

The summary shall be made by country of origin and district of entry. Information with respect to volumes of food products to be included in the summary shall, to the extent feasible, be obtained from data bases of other Federal agencies.

(d) COMPILATION.—Not later than 90 days after the expiration of 1 year after the data management systems are placed into effect under subsection (a) and annually thereafter, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall compile a summary of the information described in subsection (b) with respect to the previous year. When the Food and Drug Administration is able to make summaries under subsection (c), the Secretary shall include in the compilation under the preceding sentence a compilation of the information described in subsection (c). Compilations under this subsection shall be made available to Federal and State agencies and other interested persons.

SEC. 4703. FOREIGN PESTICIDE INFORMATION.

(a) COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall enter into cooperative agreements with the governments of the countries which are the major sources of food imports into the United States subject to pesticide residue monitoring by the Food and Drug Administration for the purpose of improving the ability of the Food and Drug Administration to assure compliance with the pesticide tolerance requirements of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act with regard to imported food.

(b) INFORMATION ACTIVITIES.—

(1) The cooperative agreements entered into under subsection (a) with governments of foreign countries shall specify the action to be taken by the parties to the agreements to accomplish the purpose described in subsection (a), including the means by which the governments of the foreign countries will provide to the Secretary of Health and Human Services current information identifying each of the pesticides used in the production, transportation, and storage of food products imported from production regions of such countries into the United States.

(2) In the case of a foreign country with which the Secretary is unable to enter into an agreement under subsection (a) or for which the information provided under paragraph (1) is insufficient to assure an effective pesticide monitoring program, the Secretary shall, to the extent practicable, obtain the information described in paragraph (1) with respect to such country from other Federal or international agencies or private sources.

(3) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall assure that appropriate offices of the Food and Drug Administration which are engaged in the monitoring of imported food for pesticide residues receive the information obtained under paragraph (1) or (2).

(4) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall make available any information obtained under paragraph (1) or (2) to State agencies engaged in the monitoring of imported food for pesticide residues other than information obtained from private sources the disclosure of which to such agencies is restricted.

(c) COORDINATION WITH OTHER AGENCIES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall—

(1) notify in writing the Department of Agriculture, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Department of State at the initiation of negotiations with a foreign country to develop a cooperative agreement under subsection (a); and

(A) new and improved analytical methods capable of detecting at one time the presence of multiple pesticide residues in food, and

(B) rapid pesticide analytical methods, and

(2) conduct a review to determine whether the use of rapid pesticide analytical methods by the Secretary would enable the Secretary to improve the cost-effectiveness of monitoring and enforcement activities under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, including increasing the number of pesticide residues which can be detected and the number of tests for pesticide residues which can be conducted in a cost-effective manner.

The Secretary shall report the plan developed under paragraph (1), the resources necessary to carry out the research described in such paragraph, recommendations for the implementation of such research, and the result of the review conducted under paragraph (2) not later than the expiration of 240 days after the date of the enactment of this Act to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Subtitle A—Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Amendments; Review of Certain Acquisitions

PART I—FOREIGN CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT AMENDMENTS

SEC. 5001. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the "Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Amendments of 1988".

SEC. 5002. PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS OF ACCOUNTING STANDARDS.

Section 13(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) No criminal liability shall be imposed for failing to comply with the requirements of paragraph (2) of this subsection except as provided in paragraph (5) of this subsection.

Such circumstances include the relative degree of the issuer's ownership of the domestic or foreign firm and the laws and practices governing the business operations of the country in which such firm is located. An issuer which demonstrates good faith efforts to use such influence shall be conclusively presumed to have complied with the requirements of paragraph (2).
